TOO PLUMP.

Mrs. Langtry's Candid Opinion of the Women of America.

They have Beautiful Faces, Splendid Eyes and Pretty Hands, but Bad Figures—Mary Anderson the Prettiest Woman the Lily has Met—Baltimore a Bower of Beauty—Her Own Defects as Viewed in Pittsburg—A Chatty Interview.

By Telegraph to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, May 5.—Mrs. Langtry will close her engagement in this city to-night, and will not reappear in New York for a year. Talking to a reporter, after referring to the great success she had met with everywhere, even on her return visits, she was asked; "And about your tour generally, have you been pleased with your trip through the country?"

"It has been delightful, and I have been so happy, excepting in some few towns where they said nasty things about me. I really love America."

Mrs. Langtry added, with rapture: "I have met with so much kindness and such success that I would indeed be ungrateful if I did not. There are many artists, don't you know, who come over here and as soon as they have made a small fortune they return to the other side. I don't mean to say that I have made a great deal of money, but I am going to stay here and enjoy it."

TO MAKE MONEY,

"Where will you go when your season has ended?"

"I give my last performance on June 2 at Worcester, Mass., I think, and then I shall star ton my holiday trip. I mean certainly to spend some time in Newport and Saratoga, and am looking forward immensely to seeing Newport."

"Will you spend the whole summer in America?"

"I should like to, but I am going to Europe late in July, and intend studying for some time under the late Adelaide Neilson's master, in Paris. I am as fond of my work as ever, and I have received such encouragement in America that it will make me study all the harder to deserve the continued appreciation of this public."

Since you have been in this country, Mrs. Langtry, have you met many American women?"

"No, I have not met a great many, for my theatrical duties have been so heavy that I have RECEIVED BUT FEW VISITORS,

and have really refused nearly all invitations, although I have had many friendly offers of hospitality wherever I have been. But the American women I have met I have been charmed with, and of course I have seen thousands and thousands of the American fair sex, for my matinee audiences are almost entirely composed of women."

"And what impression has the American woman made upon you, Mrs. Langtry? What do you think of her?"

"What a question to ask one," and Mrs. Langtry threw up her hands in astonishment. "I really do not think I can answer that. I don't think it would be delicate for me to discuss the matter. I think it cannot be expected that I should pass judgment upon the American women."

"But you must have some impressions of their manners, appearance, dress, etc. It would undoubtedly interest American women to learn what the English beauty thinks of them."

"Really this question has so surprised me that I don't know what to say, but if you think it will really be of interest I will try to tell you what I think. In the first place I think so bright and winning. One sees many more pretty faces than in England. Then I think they have beautiful hair and very pretty hands and feet."

AMERICAN WOMEN HAVE VERY PRETTY FACES,

"And their figures?"

"Well, I must take the liberty to say that I think their figures are generally bad. The American standard of figure is altogether too plump to please me. But again I don't see why my opinion should be of any interest in the matter. I have been called 'scraggy' in one town I visited."

"And where was that?"

"Well, I think it must have been in Pittsburg. I think the most disagreeable things were said of me there."

"Whom do you consider the most beautiful American woman you have seen?"

"Mary Anderson, decidedly."

"But Mary Anderson is not over plump."

"She is not; I should have said that the over-plumpness I spoke of refers principally to

THE MARRIED BEAUTIES.

I have seen. It struck me as very funny," Mrs. Langtry continued, "that in every town I visited the local papers in noticing my first appearance led off with the remark that their own town was exclusively noted for its beauties, and with such an array of native beauty it was not surprising that the famous English beauty's face made but little impression on the audience. Then they would begin to notice the performance this way: As far as Mrs. Langtry's ability as an an actress is concerned, etc., etc."

"In which town did you see the prettiest women?"

"In Baltimore. It struck me that every woman there was a beauty, and I think that Baltimore was the only town that did not boast of its native beauties."

"Do you admire the dress of American women?"

"I can not say candidly that I do. On the whole, I think they dress too smartly for the street and too simply for the theater. I think they mix their colors badly and have too many bows and ends on their dresses to my taste. A woman cannot be too simply dressed for the street. A dress of simple neutral tints pleases me best. I saw a woman in the street the other day wearing a gray ulster, a blue dress and scarlet kid gloves. Just think of that." Mrs. Langtry almost shuddered with horror at the thought of scarlet gloves. "And she also had a bouquet du corsage of daffodills. That was rather of colors, was it not?" The reporter by way of contrast somewhat reservedly remarked on the richness of Mrs. Langtry's costume. "You may call it handsome, and perhaps it is, and it might look rather too fine on the street, but I am going out driving; but it's really a very simple dress—a peacock velvet overdress over a petticoat of turquoise blue veiled with moonlight jet.

"You want to know what I think of the manners of the American women? I think them charming, so free and open. The American women are so independent and there is such a delightful lack of self-consciousness about them. They are, too, very bright in conversation, and the freedom and frankness of their manner impresses one instantly. It is so different from the reserve of the GENERAL RUN OF ENGLISH WOMEN."

"You said that they did not dress well enough for the theater?"

"Well, what I meant to say was that I like to see ladies in full dress at the theater. Or they might, if they come in bonnets, wear the charming little theater bonnets one sees in the French theaters. These big hats that women wear in American theaters, I think, are abominable."

Mrs. Langtry's maid entered at this point of the interview and brought a spray of forget-me-nots and ferns. They were to be attached to her parasol. They were tied up with a blue bow. Mrs. Langtry caught sight of it and said laughingly, "Now see that bow fly," and she tore it away and threw it down. "I won't have any bows about me," she said, not even on my parasol. "Yes, you can safely say that I am making war against bows and ends."

"Well, to sum up on the American woman," Mrs. Langtry said, returning to the subject, "I think her very beautiful and charming, and I think she has very strong national characteristics. I would know an American woman anywhere."

"In what way?"

"Principally from her frank and open manner and her independence."

"What do you think of the fashions in America? Are they behind the European fashions?"

"Well, I should say that

THE AMERICAN STYLE IN DRESS,

in cuts and all that, is about a year behind that of Paris. Talking of American dress, I think that American women think that we dress very badly in England, and I have heard it said that I dress fairly well for an English woman, but I must say that English women dress admirably and the Princess of Wales has set us a charming example in simplicity of dress." Mrs. Langtry, as the carriage arrived to take her to the park, said to the reporter that she would have the happiest reminiscence of her first American tour and was already looking forward to her next season here, which opens at Montreal, on October 29. "The year after that I shall play in London," added Mrs. Langtry.

"As the great American star?"

"That would be a nice idea, would it not? Perhaps I will. I love America so and everything American, I really think I shall become an American citizen."

"And own real estate?"

"Yes, perhaps I may—some day."

THE NEW YORK PRESS.

What the Journals of the Metropolis are Saying Editorially To-Day.

By Telegraph to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, May 5.—The Sun says: "If the present distracted condition of the Republican party in this State should continue it would be overwhelmingly defeated in the next election. Some of the leaders are trying to bring the two factions together, but the figures of the last election are very discouraging. Folger's vote fell 213,080 below that cast for Garfield, or, in other words, nearly two-fifths of the Republicans refused to support the regular candidate for Governor, though he was one of the pillars of the National Administration. These 213,080 votes are Half-breeds. The Republican State Committee is controlled by Stalwarts and so are the Central Committees in a large majority of the cities and counties. This faction would manage the work of organization in its own interest. The Half-breeds know this and object to coming under the Stalwart yoke until a compromise is effected. Harmony remains a long way off."

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal says: "The newspapers of Germany having got up a wild excitement over the alleged unwholesomeness of American pork, so as to compel Germans to buy at exorbitant prices the pork grown by local farmers and shun the American product, resentment is in order. It is proposed that a tariff be put on the importation of stockings, of which Germany furnishes us with $4,500,000 worth every year. If we should suppress German hose it would ruin a good many German manufacturers, and thousands of German weavers and knitters would be thrown out of work. We play hogs against hose, and, as the question of appetite is involved, we shall be pretty sure to win.

HERR MOST, THE SOCIALIST,

A Talk With the Wild Revolutionist this Morning.

A little undersized man, with almost a French neatness of dress, a quick, nervous step, a peculiarly shaped head, in that it is almost the shape of a pear with the small end upwards, and with great heavy, wide jaws covered with sandy whiskers, parted at the chin and combed back in European style, got off the Louisville and Nashville train at the Union Depot last evening, and was recognized by the group of St. Louis socialists, as Herr Most, the anarchist, communist and socialistic agitator, who will remain in the city for perhaps a week, making speeches and spreading the doctrine which he has preached on both sides of the ocean. The committee escorted him to Central Turner Hall, where he remained for an hour in the bar-room, answering questions in German, English and French. There was quite a turnout of Socialists, anxious to see and talk with a genuine exile and confessed revolutionist, and the hour was quite late when Mr. Teschier, a prominent Socialist, who had known Most in the Fatherland, carried him off to his residence, on Eleventh and Julia streets, in the southern part of the city, where he will remain during his stay in the city. A POST-DISPATCH reporter called there at 10 o'clock this morning and was kept waiting in a pleasant sitting-room but a few minutes before Herr Most entered, smoking an after-breakfast cigar of palpable cheapness. The agitator submits to the interviewing process with the grace and readiness begot by extended experience. His English is hardly perfect, but it was so much better than the reporter's German, that the conversation was carried on in the principal language of the United States. Asked as to his plans in St. Louis, Herr Most said: "I will lecture to-night at Central Turner Hall on the condition of society as I find it in the United States, with an appeal for the encouragement of socialism in America. To-morrow night I shall speak upon the social condition of Europe. On Monday I will hold a private meeting to which none but recognized Socialists will be admitted. It will be a confer nce. On Tuesday night I shall speak at North t. Louis Turner Hall on society in Europe and America and point out the remedy for existing evils. Other engagements will be made for me and duly announced later in the week."

"How do you find socialism in the United States?"

"The people of the United States are in tone Anglo-Saxon, and slow to move. I expected to find many German Socialists in this country, and was not disappointed; but when I learned how the doctrine of right and justice to humanity had taken root and spread among the English-speaking population I was as much delighted as surprised Every city has its English-speaking section of the socialists party. They are not forward or demonstrative. In fact they hardly appear upon the surface, but they exist and are at work. They are thinkers and quiet workers, and will be heard of when the time comes."

"What time?"

"The time when socialism prevails."

"And what does that mean?"

"It means when the wealth of the world belongs to society and is worked for the common good. When hunger and want are no more. When concentrated capital is no more."

"How will this be brought about?"

"By the spread of the doctrine of socialism. By the spread of the principles of communism in its true sense. Peacefully if possible, forcibly if must be, anarchy if you will."

Herr Most grew excited at this point and paced the floor as he delivered long sections of his regular addresses, and at the conclusion of the rehearsal the reporter left.

Taken Back for Trial.

To-day William Meyer, who was quietly arrested a few days ago in this city, was taken to Renick, Mo., to answer a charge of fraud. Meyer is charged with being implicated in a mule transaction in which William Grant, of Renick, lost about $3,000, and out of which several criminal prosecutions have grown.

THE SENEY SYSTEM.

Jay Gould and the Tennessee, Georgia and Virginia Railroads.

Another Railroad Route to be Swallowed Up by the Wall Street King—How it Will Affect St. Louis.

The rumors afloat, and of late given considerable credence from most quarters, that Jay Gould had obtained control of the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia Railway, and that the system would be added to or managed in the close interests of the consolidated systems, means much to St. Louis interests, if true. The necessity of an eastern seaboard outlet for the great Southwestern system has been apparent from the start, and Mr. Gould has made great efforts to secure a feasible route. The necessity for this outlet gives color to the rumor of the absorption or gain of control of the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia Railway. The East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia Railway system, as generally understood, is an air-line from the Mississippi Valley at Memphis to the seaboard. It is, in reality, only a portion of what is the Virginia, Tennesee and Georgia Air Line, comprising the Shenandoah Valley, Norfolk and Western, and East Tenneseo, Virginia and Georgia Railways, which are practically all under the same management and conducted in the same intimate interests. The East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia is, however, the larger interest in the system, and from the fact of its direct connection at Memphis with the Gould Southwestern system is considered the entire system itself. The nucleus of the air line referred to was the old East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia Railway, running from Chattanooga, Tenn., to Bristol, on the State line between Tennessee and Virginia, 242 miles in length. Several years ago the Memphis and Charleston Railway, Stevenson to Memphis, 272 miles, was added, leaving a gap of thirty-eight miles between Stevenson and Chattanooga, which is spanned by the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis Railway, and whose tracks are used by the East Tenn. Va. & Ga. Afterwards a line to Rome, Ga., from Chattanooga was secured and one thence to Brunswick, on the Southeast coast, and another line to Meridian, Miss., on the southwest, giving the system, with several small branches, over 1,400 miles of road. To this is added under one management the Norfolk and Western Railway, running from Bristol, the eastern terminus of the East Tenn., Va. & Ga., to Norfolk Va., on the Atlantic coast, a distanee of 408 miles, and the Shenandoah Valley Railway, running from Roanoake, on the N. & W., to Hagerstown, Md., a distance of 239 miles, giving the entire system nearly 2,100 miles of road. This, added to the consolidated system with its 10,000 miles of road, and St. Louis the center of the entire system, would, as said before, mean much to St. Louis one way or the other, and this rumor coming on the heels of the assurances given a POST-DISPATCH reporter last Tuesday by Mr. Gould himself, that to him the interests of St. Louis are paramount, and that nothing injurious to St. Louis trade in the least would be done by his roads, leads the average patriotic St. Louisan to wonder whether the proposed coup d' etat would not divert trade from St. Louis to an appreciable extent. The East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia Railroad runs through that part of the South richest in all manner of productions, both agricultural and mineral, and the connection with the consolidated systems would make that great section of country directly tributary to St. Louis and on better terms than any other competing city. It cannot give the Eastern cities any more advantages in that section's business than they now have, as the consolidation is on the West, and the country directly tributary to St. Louis will be increased that much. In the matter of through business, however, St. Louis may suffer, but not to any extent compared with the benefits she will derive from the trade of the new section. A new through, and by great odds the shortest route to the Eastern seaboard will be given from the South-West, and it will be the Southwest that will most of all be benefitted. The distance to New York from Texarkana, the great distribution point of the railroads of the farther Southwest, is 1,561 miles by the shortest possible route as now arranged. By the new route over the E. Tenn., Va. & Ga., the longest possible distance from Texarkana is 1,400 miles and if calculated on the same allowances as the prorating distances between St. Louis and New York, would be 100 miles less, giving the new route the great advantage of 261 miles in distance, and the greater advantage of being all except 270 miles under one management. The effect of this on rates would not benefit St. Louis; perhaps the contrary, as the rates to Mississippi river points will always be fixed by the pool, but the through rates from the Southwest can be manipulated by the Southwestern system at will. Herein will the Southwest be the gainer. Still another and by still greater odds a better route to the seaboard is afforded by the new consolidation as proposed. Port Royal, on the South Carolina Coast, has the finest harbor on the South Atlantic Coast, and Port Royal is but a short distance from Brunswick, the southern terminus, of the Southwestern Branch of the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia Railroad. By making port for exports, Mr. Gould will have a route to the seaboard nearly 600 miles shorter than any now in use, and one with which competition from any source would be out of the question. The vast and rapidly increasing exports of the West and Southwest—grain, cattle, dressed meats, and manufactures—would, by this last mentioned route, be run to the seaboard at two-thirds the present cost, and in this reduction of rates and increase of tributary country would St. Louis, more than any other city, be benefited. For St. Louis is and must forever be, as the system is now arranged, the pivot on which turns the success or failure of the Southwestern and Wabash systems. The diversion of through business from the St. Louis route to the air line route via Memphis would be inevitable, and other roads leading east from St. Louis might suffer, but the increased business of the new tributary country from the Southwest would many times overbalance that loss. Another and very important route opened by this consolidation would be that to the seaboard at Norfolk, and which would be the medium route as to distance between that to New York and the one to Port Royal. It would, for the entire distance, be over lines under one management, 400 miles shorter than that to New York, via St. Louis as calculated, and 200 miles shorter than the air line route to New York via Memphis. The consolidation therefore, if arranged as rumor intimates, will give the Gould roads complete control of three direct routes from the Southwest to the seaboard, 200, 400 and 600 miles shorter respectively than the route now in use, greatly increase the country tributary to St. Louis, and, in fact, make St. Louis the business emporium of the southern half of the United States.

GOLDEN JUBILEE.

The Fiftieth Anniversary of the St. Vincent De Paul Society.

To-morrow being the fiftieth anniversary of the establishment of the Society of St. Vincent de Paul, the occasion will be observed with fitting ceremony, by the conferences and councils in this city. At 8 o'clock to-morrow evening a grand reunion of members and their friends will take place at the St. Louis University Hall, on Ninth and Washington avenue. Bishop P. J. Ryan will preside. A brief address of welcome will be delivered by Mr. Louis Fusz, president of the Upper Council. A number of choice musical selections will be rendered and an address upon the history and objects of the St. Vincent de Paul Society will be delivered by Mr. W. J. Onahan, of Chicago.

The Society of St. Vincent de Paul was in Paris fifty years ago, by eight Catholic students. The society owed its first impetus to Frederic Ozanam, a young law student, and its first meeting was held at the office of a fellow student named Bailly, who is yet living, and who at the time was the editor and publisher of a weekly journal called the Catholic Tribune. Ozanam explained to his associates that the purpose which he had in view was the establishment in Paris of a society of Catholic young men who should devote their leisure to the relief of distress in the great city. They called themselves the Societaires of St. Vincent de Paul, because that saint devoted a long and busy life to deeds of practical, unselfish charity and because they desired to emulate his noble example. Of St. Vincent de Paul it is related that he offered himself to Tunision pirates as a substitute for a poor man who, during the reign of Louis XIV., had been captured on the high seas and carried to Africa. The saint remained with his captors for a number of years, devoting the time that could be spared from grievous toil to the relief of his fellow prisoners. On returning to France the Saint continued his great work and established the noble charity known as the House of St. Lazare, whose doors from that time have remained constantly open to the poor and afflicted of every race and creed. From the central organization of the St. Vincent de Paul Society a number of branches spread out, all of which maintained an intimate subordinate relation with the original body.

OZANAM, THE FOUNDER, was well-known to all the poor and miserable wretches of Paris, and, though, in the revolution of 1848 he felt compelled to take sides with the Government against the populace, he never lost their affection. It was Ozanam who, in his uniform as a National Guardsman and unarmed, accompanied Monseigneur Affre, the Archbishop of Paris, when that prelate advanced to the barricades for the purpose of asking the people to lay pown their arms. The Archbishop was shot down, and Ozanam, whose person was held sacred, received the dying man in his arms. Afterwards, Ozanam abandoned the profession of law for that of literature, occupying a Professorship in the University of the Sorbonne. He died while holding that position, on the 13th day of May, 1853, at the early age of forty. He lived long enough, however, to see the society which he had founded established firmly throughout the whole world. The charity which the St. Vincent de Paul Society aims to dispense is altogether practical, being principally directed towards supplying the peculiar needs of the country where it is established. At present there are 6,000 councils and 200,000 members of the society in the world. There is no corner of the earth, no matter how remote or obscure, whither its ministering hand is not extended.

IN THE UNITED STATES

it has branches in every State and in every city. The first conference in the United States was established in 1843 in this city, the founders being Father Heim, the secretary of Archbishop Kenrick, Judge Bryan Mullanphy and Messrs. John Amend, James C. Bury and Joseph O'Neil. At present each prrish in the city has its own conference, the members of which make it their duty to inquire into and supply the wants of thir own poor. The funds for this noble work are advanced by the members themselves, each according to his means, and the total amount distributed annually by the society is nominally $15,000. As a matter of fact, however, it is very much greater.

THE RULES OF THE SOCIETY

prescribe that relief can be given only upon the report of a committee appointed for the purpose of investigating the condition of poor people recommended to the notice of the conference. It frequently happens that the case requires the instant expenditure of money, which the committeemen themselves advance, and which the conference is hardly ever asked to reimburse. To show how thoroughly practical and genuinely charitable is the work done by the St. Vincent de Paul Society the reader need only be reminded that on the morning after the break in the Mill Creek Sewer a great many poor people, whose condition had been wretched enough before, were made entirely destitute. Two members of the St. Vincent de Paul Society, without waiting to be supplicated for relief, went down into the district at once, and in less than two hours they distributed almost $500 to the sufferers.

The celebration to-morrow in simultaneous with the celebration of the same event which it is designed to commemorate in every part of the world. In Paris the ceremonies extend over a period of six days, and a very great number of visiting societies will be received and entertained by the home councils.

MRS. GANZHORN'S GRIEVANCE.

Divorce Case Against a Man of Past Prominence.—Liquor's Lure.

Mrs. Catharine Ganzhorn entered in the Circuit Court to-day a petition for divorce from John Ganzhorn. The marriage took place June 4, 1862, and the parties lived together until April 7 1883. Mrs. Ganzhorn alleges that her husband rendered her condition intolerable and finally abandoned her. She states that for more than a year he was under the influence of intoxicating liquors; that the habit grew upon him until he became a confirmed drenkard; that he treated her in the most cruel and abusive manner in the presence of her children, and that he insulted her in public. On one occasion she was forced to have him arrested and he was fined in the Police Court. After their marriage Mrs. Ganzhorn entrusted her husband with the management of her syrup and sugar-coloring business, 408 Spruce street, but she alleges that he neglected it and squandered the receipts. Ultimately for the protection of herself and children and to provide some means of support she prevailed upon him to reconvey the property to her, but he exacted the sum of $100 before doing so. Mrs. Ganzhorn asks for a decree of divorce together with the restoration of her former name, Hoffman. The lady instituted a divorce proceeding once before, but it was dismissed before reaching a trial. Mr. Ganzhorn is well known and was at one time a prosperous business man. He figured prominently in politics, and was once a member of the Council. In 1875 he conducted an extensive livery business on Third street.

FOUR COURTS.

Henry F. Ferris Sent to Jail on a Three-Months' Sentence.

A white male floater was caught at the foot of Elwood street, Carondelet, yesterday afternoon.

The coroner to-day received an inquiry from Montreal, Canada, asking for Ferdinand Speigel. The relatives suppose that a Ferdinand Speigel, who was fatally burned in this city about a year ago, is the same that they are looking for.

In accordance with the verdict rendered by the jury, Judge Van Wagoner to-day sentenced Henry F. Ferris to three months in jail and pay a fine of $100. Ferris was tried the second time during the present term of the Criminal Court on a charge of killing Con Dyer, a bill poster, in a fight about the possession of a bill board at Fifth and Cerre streets. On his first trial he was found guilty of manslaughter and sentenced to two years imprisonment in the penitentiary. A new trial, which was granted on some technical grounds, resulted in his conviction for manslaughter in the fourth degree and his sentence to three months in jail, which takes effect at once.

John Scott pleaded guilty to a charge of vagrancy in the First District Police Court this morning and was fined $5. Judge Jecko gave him two hours' time to leave town.

Garesche-Vogel Contest.

The Garesche-Vogel contest for the office of Circuit Clerk was again before Judge Adams this morning, in Circuit Court No. 1. A. R. Taylor and Ed. T. Farish appeared for the contestant, and Judge John M. Krum and J. C. McGinnis for the contesstee.

It was understood that the court would hear to-day all the legal questions raised by the motion to strike out the notice of contest. It seemed, however, that the same questions of law are involved in the motion entered before Judge Thayer, relative to the Harrigan-Mason contest for the Sheriff's office. Judge Adams therefore decided to defer the hearing until next Friday morning, when Judge Thayer will sit with him, and the motions in both contests can be disposed of at one time.

Returned from Abroad.

Mr. C. F. Mathey, of the Mermod & Jaccard Jewelry Company, has just returned from a flying trip to Europe after an absence of only seven weeks. The voyage out was unpleasant on account of rough weather, but the return trip, which he made on the Hamburg line steamer "Gellert," was delightful, the weather being everything that could be desired. While in Europe Mr. Mathey purchased in Paris and other art centers a very large invoice of diamonds and other precious stones and bric-a-brac. Another service which Mr. Mathey performed for his fellow-citizens of St. Louis was to make a careful inspection of all the great exposition buildings in Europe, his special purpose being to ascertain just the character of building that would be suitable for an Exposition and Music Hall in St. Louis. Having performed this task, Mr. Mathey is prepared to give the directors of the St. Louis enterprise a number of valuable suggestions on the subject.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Dissatisfaction in the Imperial Regiments in Russia.

The Meeting of the Emperor of Austria and King of Italy Postponed—Fatal Explosion in England—Cablegrams.

Austro-Hungary.

VIENNA, May 5.—Little progress seems to have been made towards adjusting the grievances which caused the bakers' assistants here to go on a strike. Last night a thousand of the strikers engaged in a riot at the assembly rooms. The furniture was destroyed and the windows broken. The rioters then threw up a barricade in the street to enable them to resist the police, who had been summoned to quell the disturbance, and who had a difficult time in subduing the infuriated mob. Simultaneously with this outbreak a demonstration was made in another part of the city by 400 more strikers, who attacked a building occupied by the Bakers' Association, the doors and windows of which they broke. Both parties of the rioters were finally dispersed.

POSTPONED.

VIENNA, May 5.—The meeting of King Humbert, of Italy and the Emperor Francis Joseph, of Austria, which was to have taken place at Berlin this spring has been postponed until the 9th of next November.

Russia.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 5.—It is believed the authorities at Moscow have been invested with the power to arrest a number of persons who have been acting suspiciously in that city and to detain them until the coronation of the Czar has taken place. Much ill feeling exists in some of the regiments of the army, owing to the fact that rewards are being offered to the men to induce them to denounce any of their comrades who are known to be Nihilists.

South America.

LIMA, May 5.—The Diario Official reports that Colonel Canto has had two engagements with Caceri's forces at Balconiello and Pampas de Sicaya. In both cases he routed the enemy, capturing cannon and forty rifles. The Chilians had four killed and twelve wounded, and the Monteneros fifty-nine killed. Caceri is at Tarta and his troops are demoralized.

England.

PORTSMOUTH, May 5.—An explosion occurred in the Government powder magazine, situated on Priddy's Head, in Portsmouth Harbor. The building was completely demolished. It is reported that nine persons are killed and a number injured.

LATER.

LONDON, May 5, 12 M.—Later information from Portsmouth states that the explosion in the powder magazines on Priddy's Head was caused by the accidental ignition of some powder during the filling of a quantity of shells. The loss of life, happily, is not as great as was first reported. Only two persons were killed outright. Five, however, are so badly injured that they are in a dying condition.

SIX VICTIMS.

LONDON, May 5, 2 P. M.—A dispatch just received from Portsmouth states four of the persons injured at the powder explosion have died, making the total number of fatalities six.

Ireland.

DUBLIN, May 5.—Fitzharris will be tried by a special jury as accessory to the murder of Burke and for the murder of Cavendish. An entirely new jury panel has been summoned.

Persia.

LONDON, ENG., May 5.—A dispatch has been received from Tabreez, Persia, reporting that the city has been visited by an earthquake which destroyed a great many houses and caused the death of a large number of persons.

Killed.

KALAMAZOO, MICH., May 5.—A Daily Telegraph special from the Ishpenning, Lake Superior, iron region, says two men, Wm. Boundy and Thomas Tregarton, were killed at the Champion mine, west of here on the M. P. & O. Ry., last night. They were knocked from the skip into the shaft by falling ice, and dashed to pieces at the bottom of the pit. Harry Barret, fireman at the Mitchell mine, was buried by the run last night. It will take at least three days to recover him. All three leave large families dependent upon them for support.

Shut Down.

READING, PA., May 5.—The Philadelphia and Reading Rolling Mill shut down to-day for one week on account of depression in the trade and the lack of orders. The puddlers at the Reading Iron Works, who had asked an advance in wages from $3 50 to $3 75 per ton and were refused, now offered to return to work at the old rate, if paid semi-monthly. The company holds the matter under advisement.

Mutual Union.

NEW YORK, May 5.—The stockholders of the Mutual Union Telegraph Company met to-day to ratify the transfer of properties to the New York Mutual Telegraph Company, and to exchange the stock of one company for the stock of the other share and share alike. The stock of the older company is to be valued at $100 per share and the stock of the other at $25. They also voted to reduce the capital stock of the company from $11,000,000 to $2,500,000.

Arrested.

By Telegraph to the Post-Dispatch.

CLARKSVILLE, MO., May 5.—Sheriff C. A. Wattson, of Calhoun county, Ill., came here this morning and arrested Allen Kelley, one of the constable's posse who shot and killed some fishermen a few days since in Cap au Gris Bay, and took him to Calhoun county, Ill. Kelley says when they (the posse) were ordered to fire on the fishermen he fired his gun in the air.

Burned to Death.

RONDOUT, N. Y., May 5.—A fire this morning destroyed five dwellings, two barns and sheds. Two children of M. Cohn, David, aged four, and Rosa, aged twelve, were consumed in the flames. The bodies were found.

Blue Laws Repealed.

ALBANY, May 5.—Governor Cleveland has signed the Campbell penal code amendments, which practically repeal what are known as the Sunday "Blue" laws, which have been so obnoxious to a large class of citizens in New York and Brooklyn.

Burned.

BOSTON, May 5.—The store and dwelling of Richard Davis at Longplain, Mass., burned last evening with most of the contents. Loss on building, $4,300. Stock valued at $35,000; insurance $16,000.

Verdict of Guilty.

PHILADELPHIA, May 5.—The jury in the case of Ellis H. Phipps, ex-Alms-house Superintendent, charged with forgery, after being out all night, returned a verdict of guilty this morning.

Pennsylvania Legislature.

PETERSBURG, VA., May 5.—The Pennsylvania legislators, who are visiting the battle-grounds near Petersburg, left this morning for City Point on a special train.

Horses vs. Bicycles.

BOSTON, May 5, 1:30 P. M.—Score in Casino race: Horses, 807 miles; bicycles, 779 miles.

Indications.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 5.—South Atlantic States, partly cloudy, with local rains, variable winds shifting to northwesterly, stationary or higher temperature and pressure. Gulf States, partly cloudy weather, occasional rain winds, mostly northerly, stationary or lower temperature, generally higher pressure. The alleged omission of the railroads to pay taxes amounting to nearly $500,000 is now under consideration of the Board of Equalization, and it is claimed that no such omission ever occurred and that the trouble came about by changing the time for railroads paying taxes in 1873.

The Brown & Adams Manufacturing Company, of St. Louis, were issued a certificate of incorporation this morning; capital, $50,000.

TRAGEDY ON A TRAIN.

The Murderer Supposed to be a Crank—The Killing.

Charles K. Adams, a rough-looking fellow, shot and killed William Nichols, a passenger on the M. K. & T. train, near Montrose, Mo., last night under most mysterious circumstances. Nichols was from Dallas, Texas, and was on his way to St. Louis with a friend named F. M. Cockrell. Before the train reached Montrose Adams had some trouble with Sol. Blatt and O. P. Howk about the former's baggage, which Adams had attempted to secrete. As the train reached Montrose Adams pulled his pistol and fired, evidently intending to hit either Blatt or Howk. The bullet struck Mr. Nichols in the neck, killing him instantly. Adams was at once arrested and disarmed by Conductor Nance. He was taken to Clinton, in Henry county, and lodged in jail. The body of the murdered man was also taken there. Nichols is a drummer and is well known in St. Louis.

Prohibition Meeting.

A meeting of Prohibitionists will be held this afternoon, at three o'clock, at the office of ex-Gov Chas. P. Johnson. The meeting is an adjourned one for the purpose of hearing the report of the committee of ten appointed at the last meeting to secure signers to the declaration of principles of the Prohibition Alliance. The committee will also report a place and time for holding the mass meeting in the city for the purpose of beginning a city branch of the Alliance. The mass meeting will be addressed by ex-Govs. Johnson and Brown and by Dr. Brooks and others, when the campaign will be formally opened. Mr. McMichael is in the city, and has visited Kansas City, Plattsburg, Liberty and other places. He attended the dedication of the temperance temple at Liberty and said that the meeting was largely attended, and was addressed by Dr. Brooks, Dr. Wallace and Rev. M. Plumb, of Hannibal. The annual convention of the Prohibition Alliance will meet at Warrensburg, June 28, when delegates will be sent from every branch in the State; hence it is necessary that organization be accomplished as soon as possible.

Manager Norton.

Manager John W. Norton returned from Cincinnati this morning, where he went to attend the Dramatic Festival. To a POST-DISPATCH reporter he said: "The festival was a financial success, but hardly so in an artistic sense. The hall is too big, and the experiment will not be repeated. You can get a good idea of how the stage looked by reversing an opera glass in an ordinary theater. It was impossible to hear much. Clara Morris, from where I sat, might as well have been playing in a pantomine for all I heard of her Amelia. Mr. McCullough's heavy voice could not be heard half the time. Lawrence Barrett and Mary Anderson could be heard better than any one. In fact, they are the only two that I carried away any recollection of. The ensemble was fine, and every appointment was in the highest style of art, but the audience felt as if seated in the grand stand of a base-ball park while a performance is in progress in the extreme centerfield.

THE Merchants' Detective Association of this city seems to be just what the business community have so long desired and needed, a secret service system controlled and managed by intelligent, honorable men, who understand not only mercantile work, but are able to ferret out and detect crime wherever it may be found. The system is supported entirely by the business men, merchants principally, and no person is employed or allowed to remain in the service of the association who is not strictly temperate and thoroughly reliable. Office southwest corner of Sixth and Olive. G. W. COLE, Manager.

THEIR SECOND WIND.

Having Recovered Which, the Seven will Fight Their Battle Out.

What Will be Done at the Meeting on Tuesday Night—The Committees.

It was given out on the quiet to-day, at the City Hall, that the Seven Slate-smashers had recovered from the surprise occasioned by the withdrawal of the Mayor's slate at the meeting on Tuesday last, and that, having got their second wind, the seven were going to win. The programme arranged by the seven is as follows: At the meeting which is to take place on next Tuesday, Messrs Stone, Straub, Temple, Vastine, Zelle, Devoy and Cummings will call for reports from the various committees to whom the appointments were originally referred. They will be met by the six stalwarts with the objection that, the appointments having been withdrawn, the committees can have no report to make. The seven will retort by saying that the Mayor had no legal right to withdraw the appointments and that it is perfectly competent for the Council to act in the premises as though they had in fact not been withdrawn. They will then renew their call for the report. The chair, President Parker, will rule them out of order. An appeal will be taken from the decision of the chair, which appeal will be sustained by a majority vote of seven against six, and then the committees will be asked to report. In order to understand what will follow it is necessary to append a list of the committees, as follows:

Ways and Means—Scudder, Rowse and Stone; Public Improvements, Rowse, Zelle and Temple; Sanitary Affairs, Vastine, Stone and Scudder; Police, Haines, Ziegenhein and Cummings; Fire Department, Ziegenhein, Straub and Haines.

To these committees the following references of appointments made on April 17 were made on that date: District Assessors, City Counselor and Assistant City Counselor, Commissioner of Supplies and Assessor and Collector of Water Rates to the Committee on Ways and Means; Boiler Inspector, Park, Street, Sewer and Water Commissioners, Commissioner of Public Buildings, Weighers of Scales, and members of the Board of Engineers to the Committee on Public Improvements; Superintendent of Fire and Police Alarm Telegraph and Chief of Fire Department to the Committee on Fire Department; Health Commissioner, members of the Board of Health; Superintendents of City Hospital, Female Hospital, Insane Asylum and Poor-House to the Committee on Sanitary Affairs, and Jailer, Police Justices, City Attorney and Assistant City Attorney and Clerks of Police Courts and Superintendent of the Work-house to the Committee on Police.

Of the five committees above named the Seven have control of two, to-wit: The Committee on Public Improvements, to which were referred the appointment of Eugene F. Weigel as Park Commissioner, Thomas J. Whitman as Water Commissioner, John W. Turner as Street Commissioner, Robert McMath as Sewer Commissioner, W. J. Fry, as Boiler Inspector, Louis Kiedus as Commissioner of Public Buildings, the Weighers of Scales and the Board of Engineers and the Committee on Sanitary Affairs, to whom were referred the appointments of Drs. Nelson and Spigelhalter as medical members of the Board of Health, Dr. D. V. Dean as Superintendent of the City Hospital, Dr. Charles W. Stevens as Superintendent of the Insane Asylum, Dr. Geo. F. Hulbert as Superintendent of the Female Hospital, and John Cordes as Superintendent of the Poor. House. All of the other appointments rest with committees when the seven are in a minority of representation, and these committees when called on for their reports at the meeting on Tuesday next will reply that they have no reports to make; then the two committees above named, on which the Seven have a majority, will make their reports, and the reports will be acted on as follows: The appointments of Eugene F. Weigel as Park Commissioner, Thomas J. Whitman as Water Commissioner, John McManns as Weigher at the Bridge Scales, John W. Glassford as weigher at the North Levee Scales, Charles W. Hotchkin as weigher at the South Levee Scales, August Homan as weigher at the City Scales, Charles H. Primm as Weigher of the Adreon Scales, and James Farrell as weigher at the Thorpe Scales Dr. Spigelhalter as a member of the Board of Health, Dr. Chas. W. Stevens, as superintendent of the Insane Asylum and Dr. Geo. F. Hulbert as Superintendent of the Female Hospital, will be confirmed. The names of those who will be reported adversely are: William J. Fry as Boiler Inspector, Robert McMath as Sewer Commissioner, Louis Kiedus as Commissioner of Public Buildings, Dr. E. M. Nelson as member of the Board of Health, Dr. D. V. Dean as Superintendent of the City Hospital, and John Cordes as Superintendent of the Poor-house.

In order to emphasize their opinion that the action of the Seven is utterly unparliamentary, illegal and unprecedented, the Six will refuse to vote, while all this that has been described is going on, but the Seven will console themselves with the reflection that they are themselves able to do all the voting that is necessary in the premises. When they have confirmed such names as they choose and rejected others they will await further issue of the affair with all patience.

How far the contemplated action of the seven is legal remains to be seen. After an appointment is confirmed by the Council, the appointee cannot assume office until he receives a commission only signed by the Mayor. When the gentlemen, whose names have been mentioned above are confirmed in the positions to which they were appointed by Mayor Ewing on April 18, apply to him for their commissions he will stoutly decline to issue the same, and then they will be forced to resort to mandamus proceedings to compel him to do so.

Willison, of Clinton School, read a paper bearing upon the subject, and a general discussion was then entered into, in which Principal Vickroy, president of the society; Secretary W. J. S. Brand, Superintendent Long and Principals Prentiss, Schuyler, Blewitt and Assistant Superintendent Torteberg participated.

FONTAINE FOOLED.

How a Challenge to Mortal Combat Was Delivered to George Monteith.

Hardly has a terrible danger been averted and the Bar Association taken a long sigh of relief, before commercial and military circles are thrown into a state of blended excitement and horror over the project of a meeting, according to the Galway code, between two young men well known and prominent in society. George W. Monteith, a young man, a lawyer by profession, but engaged at present in the publication of the Western Travelers' Guide, was seated in his room at the Bristol Hotel a few evenings since, when Mr. James Johnston, son of a well-known doctor, stalked into the apartment and delivered the following document, and gravely announced that he would await any communication that might be desired to make in return.

ST. LOUIS, May 1st.

GEORGE W. MONTEITH:

SIR: I understand that you have taken my name in vain. My informant is a lady whose veracity cannot be doubted. I demand the satisfaction usual among gentlemen when one has been injured. My friend, Mr. Johnston, will act for me.

Your obedient servant,
OGDEN FONTAINE.

The only communication was an invitation for the second to take a glass of beer, and the young men all sat down and spent a jolly evening, laughing over the foolishness of the junior member of the firm of Hill, Fontaine & Co. A formal reply has not been sent to the challenge, nor will there be one, for Monteith takes the matter as a joke and the acquaintances of both parties look upon it in the same way. Fontaine has really been the victim of a practical joke. From a young gentleman familiar with the whole affair the story was obtained by a POST-DISPATCH reporter this morning. There is a young lady of unimpeachable position living at the Bristol Hotel on Washington avenue, who feels much chagrined that her name should have figured in an affair, which, however serious it may have been intended on one side, is at best but ridiculous. Mr. Fontaine has been paying court to the young lady. Monteith and three mischief-loving comrades also board at the hotel, and are acquainted with the young lady. It has been their pleasure to amuse themselves at the expense of the ardent suitor, and he has at times expressed his annoyance. One evening recently Fontaine took the young lady to the theater. The young men also attended, and rather distracted the lady's attention, and the escort was furious. A friend suggested a challenge by way of a joke. Word then came to Fontaine's ears that Monteith had circulated the report that he (Fontaine) had stated in Jefferson City to his cousin that the young lady was much smitten with him. This brought out the challenge as above.

Mr. Monteith was seen this morning and was disinclined to talk about the matter. "This man has simply been worked up to the point of challenging me by some jolly boys. When the second came with it we all laughed, and I told Johnson to say that I was going to have his friend arrested. I have not seen Mr. Fontaine since. He has called at the hotel, but he left before I came home. He is a Kentuckian and, I suppose, meant fight, but then I think I have got too much sense to pay attention to anything as obsolete and barbarous as the code. I regret very much that the young lady has been dragged into any unpleasant notoriety through this matter."

AN UNSUCCESSFUL SEARCH.

Chief Campbell Follows Up a Boy's Thrilling Story With Poor Results.

Much against their better judgment the police devoted two hours yesterday to hunting down a tale which is published under the appropriate heading of "A Strange Story" in a morning paper. The story in brief is this: While walking down Lucas near Jefferson avenue last Wednesday afternoon, the ten-year-old son of Emanuel Bergman was accosted by a strange man, who asked him where he was going. He said he was on the way to the Planters' House where his father boarded. The strange man said he was going that way and offered to accompany the boy, chatting about various unimportant matters. They were hailed by a third man in a carriage, who offered to take the pedestrians down town. The gentleman accompanying Master Bergman seized the boy and forced him into the vehicle, where the other gagged him with half of a rubber ball and a stick. The carriage was then driven rapidly away from the scene of this thrilling experience of the kidnapped boy. On the way he noticed certain buildings, and among others the Natatorium, houses at Twentieth and Market and Union Elevator. The carriage pulled up before a frame house and one man entered. The second grew impatient at the absence of the first and entered after him leaving the young man to make a daring escape through the carriage door furthest from the sidewalk. Such was the story told by the boy to Col. Campbell, who took him over the route described. He identified the points along Nineteenth and Twentieth streets, and asked the chief to pull up the buggy before a house on Twentieth street, just south of the railroad tracks, and, before alighting, positively identified this as the house where his kidnappers entered on Wednesday. On inquiring Col. Campbell discovered that he was well acquainted with the old lady who lived there. She said no carriage had stopped there at all, and the Chief left with the opinion that his young companion was mistaken. Nothing was discovered to corroborate the boy's story, and in concluding a recommendation for his son's veracity Mr. Bergman stated that he had often spoken to the boy about kidnapping and may have impressed his mind too deeply, and set his imagination to work.

A NEW society under the name of "The Band of Mercy" has been founded by several charitable ladies, with Miss Mason at their head. It is well under way and has been joined by a branch called "The Unity Band of Mercy" which recently held its first meeting at the Mission on Wash and Ninth streets. The branch is composed almost entirely of children, the object being to incline their natures toward universal kindness to animals. Fifty-six members were enrolled and the outlook is very favorable.

Declared Off.

Mr. Wm. White, vice-president of the Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Works, will, in compliance with instructions from the president, John Jarret, declare the strike off at Carondelet this evening at 4 p. m., the proprietors of the Vulcan Mill agreeing to receive the men back.

HIS WIFE'S DEBTS.

Mr. Abram Nave Issues a Notification—Domestic Difficulties.

The publication of the following paragraph in this morning's issue of the Spectator caused a great amount of talk in fashionable circles. The Spectator says, in printing the card, that it was received by telegraph, and that it will speak for itself. It reads as follows:

SPECIAL NOTICE.

I desire to notify the public that I will not pay any debts contracted by my wife, Mary B. Nave, as she left me on the 23d of April without my consent and against my express wishes, and since then, on the 30th day of April, obtained possession of my residence at 2819 Locust street, St. Louis, Missouri without my knowledge, in violation of instructions given by me to the agent thereof.

ABRAM NAVE.

St. Joseph, Mo., May 4, 1883.

The parties are both very well known in the city. Abram Nave was for a long time a well-known business man of St. Louis, and is the father of Mr. Will Nave. After the death of his first wife, he married Mrs. Woolridge, the widow of Gen. Woolridge, who was a wealthy planter in Mississippi. At the time of her second marriage the present Mrs. Nave had one daughter, Miss Lilie Woolridge, who is now living with her, and who is one of the belles of St. Louis society. The marriage of Mr. Nave and Mrs. Woolridge occurred seven years ago, and most of the time since the family have lived in an elegant residence at No. 2819 Locust street.

A POST-DISPATCH reporter called at the residence, No. 2819 Locust street, to see Mrs. Nave. She had not yet seen a copy of the card, and the knowledge that it had been published caused her the keenest annoyment. "It is terrible," said she. "Why should he have taken such a course?"

Mrs. Nave then made a long statement of the causes of the trouble between herself and her husband. A couple of hours afterwards she called at the POST-DISPATCH office, accompanied by Mr. Charles Broadhead, and asked that the statement be withdrawn. The difficulty which culminated in the publication of to-day's card has been brewing for some time, and was known to several intimate friends of the family. Some time ago the Nave family gave up their residence on Locust street. Mrs. Nave's friends say that her husband promised to take her to New York, and then to Europe. After the house was vacated, Mr. Nave announced his intention of going to live at St. Joseph, Mo., where some of his children by his first wife reside. His wife refused to go, and he set out alone. She followed him there and they lived together until a couple of weeks ago, when she returned to the city and stopped at the Southern Hotel. On the 30th of last month a letter was received by the Southern Hotel Company, signed Abram Nave, in which money was sent to pay Mrs. Nave and Miss Lillie Woolridge's board. Mr. Nave informed the proprietors that he would be no longer responsible for his wife's debts. She then left the hotel and took possession of the residence on Locust street. Mr. Obear had been ordered to let the house, and had rented it, it is understood to Mr. Joseph D. Lucas. Some arrangement was made, however, and Mrs. Nave is now in possession. The lady is inclined to lay most of the blame on Mr. Will Nave, who, she thinks, has been his father's adviser in all that was done. There will probably be further developments Mr. Will Nave was reported to have arrived in town this morning, but had not registered at any of the hotels.

BELLEVILLE.

Daniel Kohler was fined $3 and costs. He became fatigued and slept on the sidewalk.

Daniel Hoffman is resting easily in the station-house. Capt. Betts, with the assistance of several citizens, brought him to the lock-up. He was drunk and combative.

Capt. William White, vice-president of the Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers, left for Carondelet this morning on business connected with the Vulcan Works.

Mr. Wm. McClintock, who performed the marriage ceremony for Mr. and Mrs. Araham Schoupe fifty years ago, in Belleville, will attend the golden wedding of the couple, which takes place on the 9th inst.

Mrs. M. T. Slookey and a lady friend met with an accident yesterday, but fortunately escaped uninjured. She was returning from a visit to her father when the horse became frightened and ran away. The ladies jumped with safety. The animal was caught, the injuries to the vehicle being slight.

The City Council will meet on next Monday to make appointments for the various city positions. The City Marshalship is considered the most important. At a caucus held by the members of the Council the present incumbent, Louis Williams, was strongly indorsed. He is justly considered the best officer Belleville ever had.

Marriage record from 28th of April to May 5th: A. C. Howard and Annie Garvey; Robert Sliper and Heeling Steinerd; John Luckast and Louisa Schott; Albert M. Nohm and Mrs. Louisa Gulteau; Joseph Angel and Annie Davis; Louis Dobyn and Mrs. Josephine Reise; George A. Frazer and Carie Goalby; Desire De Wolf and Emilie C. Karle; Bernard H. Frick and Augusta C. Redroth; Edward Hussles and Matilda Grondenburg; Nicholas Mueller and Johanna Robinson; Anthony Scarbrough and Kate Miller.

EAST ST. LOUIS.

Charles Cole was arrested last evening for being drunk and was fined $3 and costs by 'Squire Draggon this morning.

The Stock Yards Club gave a grand ball at the Allerton House last night, which was attended by a large and select crowd.

At the business meeting of the members of the R. R. Y. M. C. A., held last night, C. A. Barker and A. M. DeClarcy were elected to represent the East St. Louis branch at the International Convention of the Y. M. C. A., to be held at Milwaukee, commencing May 16, and continuing till the 20th.

Coroner Bader held an inquest on the body of William Regan this morning, a verdict of accidental death being rendered. Regan was fireman of bridge-engine No. 13, and at 11 o'clock last night was engaged in switching near the Relay Depot. A long train of freight cars were cut in two and Regan had instructions to ride on a portion of the train to the next switch. Before he gained a foothold the engine gave a sudden pull, throwing Regan across the tracks. The rear cars of the train passed over both legs and the left arm, almost amputating them. He was with difficulty taken from under the trucks by his brakeman and carried to the reading rooms where he died three hours later. His remains will be shipped to relatives in New York this afternoon.

St. Louis Dime Museum.

The St. Louis Dime Museum has secured a number of novelties for the ensuing week. By maintaining a first-class exhibition of curiosities the management of this institution have made it the resort of thousands. From the opening of the gates until the closing hour at night the place is crowded with families and curiousity hunters. Changes have been made in all the departments for next week. The star attraction will be Jocko, the orang-outang. This is the largest orang-outang that has ever been brought to this country alive. It was captured in Africa and shipped to Reiche, the American manager of the well-known animal hunting firm, arriving in this country six weeks after it was taken by the hunters in its native forests. It is by far the finest specimen that has ever been exhibited in this city. At first the keeper had great difficulty in handling Jocko. The animal could only be approached by his keeper, a German who never attempted any liberties with his unsociable prisoner without first presenting him with a meal of fruit. It was discovered, however, that he could be best handled by a negro for whom he showed a friendly inclination. Jocko will prove an attractive card at the Museum during the coming week, and will have an opportunity to make friends of thousands of St. Louisans. All the departments have been changed, and new curiosities substituted for those that have occupied a place during the past week. The museum is open daily from 1 to 10 p. m., offering an excellent exhibition of novelties and curiosities for ten cents.

Francis A. Van Gassy has filed a suit on a thousand dollar note against Andrew C. Bryden. The note was executed in favor of and indorsed by O. T. Prickett. Alice Guiteau's indorsement likewise figures on the note. Some litigation has already occurred with reference to the indorsements.

Letters of administration were granted to-day to Julia A. Curtis, administratrix of Mark Curtis, and to Bridget Hogan on the estate of James Hogan, valued at $10,000. The will provides that the widow shall enjoy the property. The children received $10 each.

Mexican Tourists.

Hon. Amos Townsend, of Cleveland, Ohio, and ex-Congressman Anson G. McCook, of New York, are at the Southern, having arrived this morning from Mexico, where they have been traveling since the adjournment of Congress, in company of Senator Miller, of California, and others. They went to the City of Mexico via Vera Cruz and from there traveled by rail to Lagos, whence they went by diligence to Monterey, the present terminus of the Mexican National road. Some time was also spent in Texas and Colorado. Both of the gentlemen said it would be hard to tell what the resources of Mexico were, but everything there indicated great capability of development, and that it was absolutely certain that the whole commerce of the country would be subjugated by the United States in the near future.

DR. ADAMS' TURKISH BATH,

On Seventh Street, Between Olive and Locust Streets.

The "hot-air bath," especially at this season of the year, is an actual necessity. The dust and dirt of the "future great" are artificial evils, and, as nature has not provided a remedy, so the Turkish bath is an artificial means of counteracting these evils. Our citizens are just finding out and appreciating the great value of the bath as a remedial agent in disease, where the bath is in charge of physicians. Nearly thirteen hundred ladies and gentlemen visited Dr. Adam's establishment in April, against eleven hundred in March.

Abducted in Persia.

Persian Letter to the London Daily News.

An outrage has been committed at Bake which bids fair to become the subject of lively diplomatic correspondence between Russia and Persia. The following are the particulars of the occurrence so far as I have been able to learn. In the month of January last the wife of a Finnish Captain in the employ of Nobel, the great petroleum firm, went to visit some friends living on the outskirts of the town. As she had not returned home by midnight her husband started out to escort her home, but found on reaching the friend's house that his wife had left some two hours previously. On the following morning the husband, having vainly searched all night for his missing wife, gave notice to the police, and every means were used to discover what had become of the poor woman so mysteriously spirited away. Two months passed, and no trace of the missing woman was discovered, to the sorrow of the husband, who spent the whole of his time in instituting inquiries in the hope of at last finding his wife. Quite recently, however, by some chance, the mystery was discovered and the woman traced. It would appear that as the woman was passing through a lonely part of the road home she was suddenly seized by four men who threw a shawl over her head and carried her off, as she afterward discovered, to a Persian craft lying at anchor in the harbor. Her captors, who were Persians, at once set sail for the Persian shore, and the woman was carried off to Teheran, where she was lodged, it is said, in a royal harem, and where it is supposed she still remains. I understand that this case of abduction has formed the subject of a strong representation on the part of the Russian Minister at Teheran, and the immediate surrender of the woman, who is, of course, a Russian subject, has been demanded. The woman, who is a Swede by birth, possesses considerable personal attractions, which no doubt were the cause of her abduction by the agents of the Shah. The whole matter has hitherto been kept quiet; but it must in a short time become the subject of discussion both in Russian society and in the press, the more so that the relations between the Government of the Shah and that of his Imperial Majesty the Emperor of Russia have not been marked for some time past by any extreme cordiality.

Orange Flowers Scarce.

From the Pall Mall Gazette.

To be married will be for this year, at any rate, a more expensive luxury than ever it was. The price of the most indispensable and time-honored adjunct of a wedding, orange flowers, cannot fail to be enhanced by the recent ravages among the orange trees in the south of France. Last year they suffered severely from blight, and this year an almost unexampled frost and snow has killed many of the young shoots which had survived. The result will be that few indeed will be the orange blossoms which will find their way northward this year from the most abundant country by which St. George's is beautified, and a fortune will be made by the lucky man who can invent an efficient substitute in the bridal bouquet.

Born a Colonel.

From the Boston Globe.

A few days after a baby was born in Newport, Ky., a gentleman neighbor called in the house, and on being shown the young one said to it: "How are you, Colonel?" Its mother then asked: "Why do you call it Colonel?" "It's a male child, isn't it?" he responded. "Yes," replied the mother. "Well, then, he's a Colonel. By the common law of Kentucky every male child born in the State is a Colonel." The mother was greatly tickled over the fact that she was the mother of a Colonel.

The Markets.

FORENOON SESSION.

A letter from St. Charles, Mo., says: "The wheat is improving from day to day, and we think there will be enough wheat to make the bulls sick after all, and notwithstanding the unfavorable crop reports."——Paloi, Osage Mission, Fort Scott and Chanute, Kansas, advices are that farmers are bringing in their corn very freely.——Mr. Mersman, of Houseman, Annan & Co., writes his firm that corn is coming up finely in many places.——One of the largest cotton houses in Europe, located in Liverpool, cables Hill, Fontaine & Co.: "Market closed higher than the opening prices—1-32d. Spinners buying freely. Spinners have bought freely lately, but they, believing in higher prices, are disposed to hold their stocks of cotton, and we expect they will continue to take their weekly consumption for the present. Think, unless your market declines, ours will advance."——Stock of wheat in St. Louis elevators has decreased 86,130 bu. during past week, 58,624 bu having been used by millers, 38,267 bu shipped out by rail, and 26,448 bu. by river. Corn is 652,583 bu smaller to-day than last Saturday; withdrawals from elevators were 113,035 bu by city consumers, 324,205 bu for rail, and 456,596 bu for river shipment.——At close of business yesterday the stock of No 2 corn in St. Louis elevators was 1,105,705 bushels, of which 589,399 bushels was on East side and 516,306 bushels on this side. There is now in process of shipment enough corn to reduce the stock to 1,000,000 bushels by Monday.——W. D. Whitmore, of Quincy, Ill., telegraphs that they had glorious rains yesterday, which assures them a full average crop of wheat.——Some bull on wheat in this market, without the fear of Ananias' punishment before his mind, telegraphed to Chicago that samples of wheat were here from Central Illinois which showed the wheat to be full of the Hessian fly. Wm. Young & Co., of Chicago, wired Boyd & Hull as to the truth of this, and in answer B. & H. sent back a most emphatic denial of the report. All the samples of Illinois wheat lately shown here were fine specimens and promised well.——It has been suggested by an Exchange member that it might be well if the next importation of Western Union messenger boys on the floor should at least be out of their diap-swaddling cloths, even if only just promoted to the dignity of knee breeches.——The speculative grain markets let down to-day in valaesbut thesituation was as uncertain and operators as badly mixed as ever. Fine weather in the West and improved crop prospects may have had something to do with the decline, but the uncertainty as to whether the Chicago clique was out of the market or not made speculators cautious and they made little attempt either to buy or sell. Chicago was fully a cent off on wheat on the "curb," but recovered some after the regular market opened. New York was also weak and lower early, afterwards moving up in price. Liverpool cables held out encouragement in wheat, which was strong and advancing, but corn was dull and easy. Locally the wheat market was a very quiet one, with a vigorous feeling manifest that caused prices to fluctuate almost constantly, though within a contracted range not over 1c. The close was very weak at declines of 1c for June, July and October, 1½c for August, 1¾c for September and 1⅜c for year from yesterday's close. Corn was even duller than wheat, receiving but scant attention from operators. The feeling was usually very weak, as outside markets were lower and advices from the country pointed to increased shipments before long. The latest sales were at declines of ¼c for May, ⅜c for June and July, ½c for August and ⅜c for year. Oats were also weak and lower, declining ⅝@c. Cash wheat was firm and even better in value, the small offerings being readily taken and mainly by millers. The market for cash corn was also pretty firm, order dealers purchasing nearly all offered, though some of the No. 2 mixed sold to speculators. Oats for cash were dull and lower, as there was little demand from any source.

East track—Mixed $6 50@11; timothy $11@13 for prime to choice; $14@15 for fancy.

Provisions—Receipts 43,255 lbs hams, 2,010,160 lbs meats, 25,400 lbs lard. A strong tone ruled in this market on encouraging reports from other points. Sellers became stiffer in their ideas and asked still higher rates, while buyers, prepared to pay on advance, were unwilling to meet the rates demanded; hence trading was restricted. Standard mess pork sold on spot at $19 90@20, on call $20 25 asked for cash, May and June, with $19 85 bid for two former and $20 05 for June. Only a nominal bid of 10¼ was made for lard. Principal holders of dry salt asked 8 for shoulders loose and 8¼ boxed; 10.60 for loose longs and 10⅝ for boxed; 10.70 for loose c'ribs and 10¾ for boxed; 10.90 for loose shorts and 11 for boxed: but a small lot loose short sold at 10¾ and c'ribs to arrive at 10.40; 200,000 lbs shoulders sold up-country. Packed bacon shoulders were held at 8¾, longs at 11⅛@¼, c'ribs at 11⅛@¼ and shorts at 11⅛. Hams 12@13⅛ plain and 12½@14 canvassed, outside for fancy brands. Tallow 8¼ for fancy cake; 8@8⅛ for strictly prime in oil barrels; No. 2 7¼@½; irregular packages 7¼@7¾; grease tallow 7@7¼. Breakfast bacon 12⅛@13½. Grease 6@7 for brown. 7@8 for yellow, 8@9 for white. Beef—Extra mess $12@16 per barrel according to brand; $7 50@8 50 per half barrel; dried 12½@13½, strictly choice 16 per pound. Fresh smoked tongues $4 50@4 75 per dozen. Salt—Domestic $1 25 this side, $1 20 E. side per barrel; ground alum $1 15 per sack for round lots, $1 20@1 25 in a small way.

Highwines—A good movement was had at $1 14 sales amounting to 97 brls. Cincinnati was steady at $113. Chicago unchanged at $1 16, Prices firm at 1 15.

Lead—Steady, with refined salable at $4 15, the latest sales being 10 cars at that price; hard quotable at $4 10 and spelter at $4 40.

Grass Seeds—Quiet but materially unchanged. Demand limited to prime seed, and owing to the small supply sales were light. German millet 40@65; common do 35@50; timothy $1 50@1 60; Hungarian 60@70; red top 40@75; clover $7 25@8. Sales, 162 sks common millet at 40; 1 car bulk German and common millet at 45 round; 3 cars white millet, to grade prime, 50.

Flaxseed—Unchanged at $1 35.

Hempseed—$1 25@1 30.

Castor beans—Prime $1 80; rejected $1 60.

Cotton.

Spot cotton to-day was again higher, all the principal markets showing an advance of ⅛@¼c. Locally a strong and bullish market was reported, with a good demand and very fair movement at the higher rates current. Liverpool was active and higher. New Orleans firm at 10¼ and New York nominal at 11c. A strong upward movement was reported in New York futures, the market opening irregular and unsettled at an advance of 1 to 14 points from last evening, the higher prices being more strongly marked for near-by options. From this values eased off, and the tone proved irregular up to the close, when it was reported weak, and prices lower by 7 to 9 points. Trading was very heavy, sales being the largest this season. At Liverpool futures were firm and higher, and closed steady at the advance. New Orleans opened irregular at 1 to 2 points up, and closed easy and 1 to 15 points lower

CATTLE—The market to-day was dull but steady. Buyers, as usual on a Saturday, were poorly represented, and the supply was small and consisted almost entirely of a few loads left over from the day before. Regular Eastern purchasers have withdrawn until the following week, and the few operators present were scalpers and speculators and manifested but little disposition to trade. Consequently outside of a few small retail transactions there was nothing done, though later it was thought a better demand would be had and a cleaning up result. Values were strong at yesterday's rates and the feeling one of firmness. We quote:

HOGS—Like the preceding market, there was hardly enough stock on sale this morning to induce buyers to take hold, and during the early hours business dragged and sales were limited in the extreme. Shippers took a few loads at the prices ruling yesterday and a few changed hands to speculators and scalpers. But altogether transactions were so small as to be hardly worth publishing, and the market may be considered about nominal at the following: Light to good Yorkers $7 10@7 15; mixed to good packing $7@7 25; butchers to extra $7 30@7 50; skips and culls $6 25@6 50.

SHEEP—Slow and nominally unchanged. Buyers poorly represented and no offerings of any consequence. Prices for clipped sheep ranged from $3@4 90; spring lambs firm at $2 25@3 25 per head.

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

State of Missouri, City of St. Louis—ss.
In the Circuit Court, City of St. Louis,
April Term, 1883.
Friday, April 13, 1883
Mollie Wild
vs.
Frederick Wild.

It appearing from plaintiff's petition this day filed, duly verified by affidavit, that the defendant is a nonresident of the State of Missouri, therefore, on motion of plaintiff by attorney.

It is ordered that said defendat be notified that a civil action has been commenced against him, the object and general nature of which is to obtain a decree of divorce from the bonds of matrimony existing between plaintiff and defendant, on the grounds that the defendant has treated the plaintiff in such a cruel and barbarous manner as to endanger the life of plaintiff and offered her such indignities as to render her condition intolerable.

And unless he appear at the term of this court to be begun and held at the city of St. Louis on the first Monday of June next, and on or before the third day thereof answer the plaintiff's petition, the same will be taken against him as confessed.

And it is further ordered that a copy hereof be published according to law in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, a newspaper printed and published in the city of St. Louis.

A true copy from the record.

Witness my hand and seal of the Circuit Court City of St. Louis, this 13th day of April, 1883.

[L. S.] 74D CHAS. F. VOGEL, Clerk.

SIXTEEN PAGES.

THE sixteen-page POST-DISPATCH to-day might be called a daisy, speaking botanically.

Now the law is laid down that the Mayor cannot withdraw a nomination. We begin to doubt whether there is such an official as a Mayor.

AN invalid patriot has applied for a pension on the ground that he had a tooth out. The Commissioner ruled that it was too thin. —[JOE MILLER.

MR. JAY GOULD was disporting on the beach at Galveston yesterday. He is inuring himself to travel, and getting ready for his trip around the world.

MARY CANNADY of 210 Bowery, New York, has a child whose head reflects the light. The child is supposed to have brightened up at the Hot Springs. It sometimes has that effect.

THE Legislature at Albany has passed the bill prohibiting railroad passes for any but railroad employes and the golden age of political purity is expected to come along in thirty days or so.

THE idea seems to be to remove the Mayor's office from the northeast corner of the City Hall to the northeast corner of Fourth and Pine. The editor of the Globe-Democrat would make a mighty good Mayor, but he has not been elected yet.

OUR esteemed contemporary the Globe-Democrat discovers that the Mayor has no power to withdraw his slate. It has cut the string, and the slate is now in the hands of the committees of Council, in beautiful sections. Now what will happen?

THE London Law Journal now informs an astonished world that under English law an English citizen may be adjudged an outlaw and his property seized in his absence without the slight formality of a trial. A little of this law ought to go a great way with Englishmen.

HERR MOST, the Socialist, who has kindly come over from Europe to tell our people how badly they are off in this country, is in St. Louis to-day. As the time for the coronation of the Czar of Russia is approaching, it seems to us that the proper place for a man of Mr. MOST's most pronounced views is very close to the orchestra in Moscow.

THERE seems to be some trouble about the bidding on the Government work at Hot Springs. The two lowest bidders have been awarded the contract and have in succession thrown it up. This looks as if there was straw in the bids, but we refuse to believe that such a thing is possible in work done at that healing pool where such statesmen as GRIF. PRATHER, GEORGE VEST and BILL HYDE are wont to resort for inspiration and political wisdom.

ONE of the most cheering spectacles presented for the contemplation of the Democratic party is the spectacle of Republican ex-Congressmen who have been repudiated by their constituents scrambling for the vacant Commissionership of Internal Revenue. This makes it look as if they expected a long dry season, and were eager to fatten at the political crib before they are finally driven away from it.

THERE was a time when the country held its breath in awe before the power of Wall Street, and brightened when Wall Street flourished, and shivered when Wall Street was afeard. But now Wall Street no longer sways the Republic; GOULD and SAGE start off for indefinite trips, and VANDERBILT steps down and out from his railroad management, and it does not even make a ripple of excitement anywhere. Our Stock Exchange is getting to be as commonplace an affair as those of London and Paris.

ONE of the most touching tributes ever paid to modest worth by sincere appreciation is the tribute of admiration and regret offered by WM. H. VANDERBILT to himself on his resignation of the Presidency of the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad. It is true that the tribute purports to come from W. H. VANDERBILT's Board of Directors, but when one reflects that if the board had not admired Mr. VANDERBILT's able and sagacious management they might have been bounced the tribute is more properly understood.

SINCE GIBBON sat in the Hotel Garden, at Lausanne, communing with books and delving away at his History of the Roman Empire, the world of literature has beheld no such spectacle as that presented by Col. GRIF. PRATHER, the Statesman, wrestling with the Iroquois Club speeches to the music of the bubbling waters of Hot Springs. "I read much of the proceedings," says the Websterian Committeeman to his intimate friend, the reporter of the Republican, "CARTER HARRISON'S speech particularly, and our local statesman's, JOHN G. PRIEST, interview." There is a royal loftiness about this which denotes a consciousness of reserve power—especially the handling of the possessive case.

THE only authority on disputed points of English grammar is the usage of cultivated people. Some people, for instance, in speaking of the hat of our local statesman, JOHN G. PRIEST, would say: "Our local statesman JOHN G. PRIEST's hat," while other people might say: "Our local stateman's, JOHN G. PRIEST's, hat." Col. GRIF. PRATHER, however, would say: "Our local statesman's, JOHN G. PRIEST, hat," and as Col. GRIFFITH PRATHER is a very highly cultivated man, his authority is final. In the same way any one would be justified in describing Col. JOHN KNAPP as "our senior editor's, Col. GEORGE, brother," or in speaking of JOE RICKEY as "our National Committeeman's, GRIF. PRATHER, friend." The English language is a beautiful language when well handled.

A MORAL RAILROAD.

The Sabbatarians who live along the line of the Louisville, New Albany and Chicago Railroad may as well prepare for the millennium, for the new idea in railroad management which is now about to be introduced and enforced by Col. YOUNG, the President of the road, is as near the Sabbatarian ideal as we may expect any one to come in this age of sordid motives and selfish considerations. Col. YOUNG has issued an order defining the policy of the management, and it appears that the principal feature of that policy will be a strict observance of the Sabbath, which is generally disregarded in railroad management.

As the road is required to carry the mails, the President will be compelled reluctantly to run passenger trains, but he promises that efforts will be made to discontinue them. Above all things no excursion trains are to be run of any kind or for any purpose on the Sabbath, and the order applies strictly to camp-meeting trains. As the order runs, "if the Christian people cannot find other places for worship, this company will not violate divine and civil law, and deny its employes the essential rest of the Sabbath, to convey them to the camp-meeting ground."

President YOUNG also states that inasmuch as quite a number of the company's employes have conscientious scruples against doing any work on the Sabbath day, these scruples must be respected by their superiors, and they are to be as fully exempt from molestation on account of these scruples as if they were Government clerks under the new civil service rules.

As this order is published in the railroad columns of the daily papers as an item of ordinary news there is no reason to suspect its genuineness, and the experiment will attract a deep and deserved interest. While we respect the honesty and sincerity of the motives which control the management, we are afraid that through passengers who have important business beyond the ends of the line on Monday morning will not appreciate the situation, and through freight, in which time is quite a consideration, will be apt to go by some other road. For these natural losses of business we see no compensation unless the higher moral tone of the management will induce Sabbatarians to settle along the line and thus build up enough business six days in the week to make good the losses of the day of rest.

BOGUS TITLES.

Quite a large number of learned men of eminence in Europe and elsewhere who have been made the proud recipients of degrees conferred by the Anthropological University of St. Louis, and authorizing them to style themselves Doctors of Divinity and Doctors of Law, will be saddened and pained by the discovery that there is no Anthropological University and that the fees they have paid are nearly a total loss, as they might have written out quite as good a degree for themselves at quite a trifling expense.

It shakes our faith in the value of wisdom and learning when we find gentlemen who have devoted their lives to such objects descending to the idiocy of purchasing degrees which they must know to be bogus, or accepting honors from an alleged university of the existence of which they never heard before in their lives. But the philosophers have been in all ages simple-minded creatures in practical matters, and the harmless vanity or childish dishonesty which impels them to sign D. D. or LL. D. after their names is a weakness which they share in common with men of the world all over the world.

In England, the higher a man rises in real worth the greater value does he attach to the privilege of calling himself by a new name, and statesmen who have swayed the destinies of nations are willing to retire into obscurity if they can get a bogus degree from the old lady who presides over the English Anthropological University. DISRAELI disappearing under the sham title of BEACONSFIELD is a modern instance. Was it NELSON who said before one of his famous victories, "The peerage or Westminster Abbey," thereby meaning that he had set as the reward of his victory a title only a trifle more genuine than those parchments which are now causing his countrymen dismay and confusion?

In this country, of course, things are different. We are republicans fond of republican simplicity, and scorning the vulgar and meretricious trappings of rank, title or honorary distinction. Nevertheless it is not known that there has been an instance in which a ward delegate has refused the proffered title of "Honorable." A citizen who has presided over the evolutions of a militia company during sixty days is hurt if thereafter he is not addressed as Colonel. We should be lacking in courtesy did we not continue through life the title of Governor to any one who has ever acted as Lieutenant-Governor, and the general rule is not only to give every man a title, but to take particular pains to fit him out with a title that does not belong to him. Perhaps, on the whole, any censures we might indulge in against the title-seeking savants and divines who have placed their faith and their money in the Anthropological College of St. Louis would be premature, as they are only in the same boat with ourselves.

THE sensitiveness of people down South to newspaper criticism has found expression in a suit brought by Miss ALICE KING, of Alabama, against the Nashville American. Miss KING is a grand-niece of WM. R. KING, who was Vice-President under FRANKLIN PIERCE. She gave some dramatic readings in Mobile and New Orleans recently, and a correspondent of the American "dished her up," as the boys say. She has brought suit, laying the damages at $25,000. It is possible that the criticism was malicious, but the probabilities are that it was only funny. At all events, the career of the lady has doubtless been crippled, and she feels that she is entitled to compensation. If every new actress, singer and public exhibitor who is criticised by the press, adversely, is to have pecuniary damages, the palladium of human liberty won't last the century out in this country. The gentlemen who publish newspapers down South say that there is a disposition in that section to regard all kinds of unpleasant criticism as an unwarranted interference with personal rights. People are fond of "taffy," but they have no stomach for vinegar. It is possible that Miss KING is an exalted type of the class which holds that the printing of a newspaper devoted to anything else but puffery is impertinence anyhow.

IT will trouble Col. JOHN G. PRIEST very much, no doubt, to discover that in the estimation of Col. GRIF. he is only "a local statesman." Mr. PRIEST is a welcome visitor at Gramercy Park. He consults with Mr. TILDEN and the great leaders of Democracy, and he doubtless fancies that he is something more than a ward politician. Col. ED BUTLER is "a local statesman." Mr. PRIEST knocked the back-door off his pent-up Utica some years ago, and since the memorable campaign of 1876 he has ranked along with the big "Copenhagen" men. Of course Col. GRIF. has spread over the country considerably. As the fishing companion of Col. BILL and the confidential adviser of Senator VEST he is what the French would call "un personage." When the MARQUIS OF LORNE visited St. Louis last winter he said to a gentleman who met him: "I regret exceedingly that I cannot stop over in your city. I should like very much to meet your great statesman, Colonel GRIFFITH PRATHER. We take great interest in his views on the tariff question, both in Canada and England."

A WARNING against the attempt to combine the worship of God and Mammon has just been given to the colored Methodists of Terre Haute, who, instead of placing a Bible in the corner-stone of their church, placed sample coins of the currency of the country to the value of as much as $4 or $5. The result is that the colored Methodist Church, Terre Haute, is now without a corner-stone, and several brothers are under suspicion.

WE welcome the declaration of the Executive Committee of the Irish Land League in which the action of the Philadelphia Convention is indorsed and in which the use of dynamite is denounced. A few such declarations from the representative bodies of Irishmen would greatly strengthen the cause of Ireland in this country, and secure it the unhesitating support of public opinion.

THERE was a solemn scene in the rear of JACOBY'S Saloon yesterday morning. It was about 10 o'clock—the hour that the Colonels from the Republican office go around and take the first nibble from the cracker-bowl. Colonel GEORGE KNAPP and Col. GRIF. PRATHER were seated at a table somewhat removed from the bibulous herd. Colonel GEORGE's brow was knit. He resembled in a minor degree the pictures of NAPOLEON the night before the battle of Austerlitz. He toyed nervously with an empty glass in front of him. Col. GRIF. seemed absorbed in the contemplation of a glass which he held in his hand.

"I see," said Col. GEORGE, speaking nervously and with some hesitation, "that you have an interview in the Republican this morning, GRIF., on politics. I'm sorry you didn't see me and consult with me before it went in. The Republican is a great Power in this country and your intimate relations with all of us make your utterances very important. I'll bet two dollars that I get a letter from TILDEN and SAM RANDALL about this thing in less than a week." As he said this the Colonel made a dive for a clove.

"Well, you see, Uncle GEORGE," responded Colonel GRIF., moving his feet nervously about in the saw-dust and evidently much embarrassed, "we all concluded down there at Hot Springs—me and BILL HYDE and GEORGE VEST—that something ought to be said at once on this Tariff question. We talked it all over there for two weeks, and, by the way, did you hear how I made JOE RICKEY lay down an ace full the day we got the papers containing CARTER HARRISON'S speech before the Iroquois Club? No? Well, I'll tell you about that this evening. Well, VEST said I was the right man to expound the doctrine, seeing that I was National Committeeman for this State. By the way, Uncle GEORGE, that man VEST is a d—d sight smarter man than we ever thought him to be. He told a couple of stories down there at Hot Springs that nearly broke my ribs."

"Were they funnier than that rat-trap story that HYDE tells?" feebly interpolated Colonel GEORGE.

"Shoh! That ain't deuce high in a jack pot to any of VEST's stories, Uncle GEORGE. As I was saying, however, it was agreed that I was to be interviewed. HYDE fixed the thing up—all except that part about him having been well treated by a boarding-house down there—I sneaked that in myself."

"But you have made a mistake in declaring yourself so openly in favor of Free Trade," interrupted Col. GEORGE. "Everybody will think that you speak for the Republican. The London Times will copy that interview and tell the Free Trade League that the Republican is on their side. Besides, you are pushing BILL MORRISON a little in your interview, and you know I'm for TILDEN. So is PRIEST."

"Well, you see, Uncle GEORGE," replied Col. GRIF, knocking on the table and motioning to the boy to repeat, "VEST said that the Democratic party would be split from shirt collar to Barbara Allen if some of us Western men didn't stand up and sass them Protectionists. I only said what I heard them saying at the Springs, and damme if I know much about it anyhow. If it makes trouble I can't help it. If you'll see HYDE or VEST they will probably explain the thing. I'm sorry I opened my big pumpkin anyhow."

By this time the glasses had been refilled. Col. GEORGE took a little sugar in his. Col. GRIF. took his neat, with Apollinaris on the outside. They drank without nodding, and Col. GEORGE really looked sad. His air of regretfulness extended as far down as the third button of his old-fashioned vest.

OUR MAIL POUCH.

Another Sprinkling Boom Started.

ST. LOUIS, May 3, 1883.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

A sprinkling boom for Pine and Locust streets, about Seventeenth to Twentieth street, would certainly be a grand success. I know of many in the West End who would gladly subscribe to such a fund. Now, can't you run it? Should you conclude to do so you may put me down for at least $1 per month for the cause. It is now impossible to drive down town by either of these streets, the principal driving streets from the western part of the city, without meeting a regular cloud of pulverized macadam. No matter how good your clothes are, or how careful you may drive, they must get dusted. Please put your shoulder to the wheel, and the dust will soon subside, and many will rise up and call you blessed.

Yours truly, P. D. YOST, M. D.

[We are ready to handle the "boom," but the residents on Pine street ought to keep the dust laid in front of their own premises. A small fund to cover the vacant lots is about all that is needed.—ED. P.-D.]

A Card from Mr. Hicks.

ST. LOUIS, May 4.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

The call in your issue of May 3, from "One who Wants to Know," escaped my notice until a friend called my attention to it.

My unknown friend is mistaken. I am no "rival of Prof. Tice." I do believe that his theory of planetary equinoxes will be found to be the correct and final solution of meteorological phenomena. "One who Wants to Know" is respectfully invited to call upon me, and I will show him the table of planetary equinoxes published by Mr. Tice in 1875, reaching to 1885. This table is the acknowledged basis of any prognostication I may have made. I am an entire stranger to Mr. Tice, but I am convinced that he has disclosed one of the secrets of nature and that his discovery is being used by some without proper credit. SOL R. HICKS,

The Terrible Water Waste.

ST. LOUIS, MO., May 5, 1883.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

The following is clipped from your edition of last evening:

The people of St. Louis are beginning to get just a little bit tired of a Water Department which cannot stand the drain of three days of warm weather, but which invariably starts a series of complaints from those who are deprived of their water supply just the time when they need it most. This kind of nonsense has been going on now for about twelve years, and summer after summer the city is filled with the just complaints of a nuisance which ought to be avoided by a very trifling exercise of official ability. People who pay for water and do not get it are swindled, and, while there might have been some excuse years ago for a failure to supply water to those who paid for it, there is no excuse for it now.

The question here referred to is one of vast importance to citizens residing in the western portion of the city. If you will apply the whip of public opinion and compel our scientific B. O. P. I. to stop the water waste and give people the water they pay for, you will earn the thanks of the many who are now "multa gemens." Send one of your reporters to Seventeenth and North Market streets, and observe the waste of water from a nine-inch pipe, hydraulicing mud from the abandoned reservoir, and expose such needless extravagance. Will you have the kindness to say whether the water which is pumped into distributing reservoirs was intended to be used for the purpose of washing dirt a distance of one mile? ALECTO.

The Dog Nuisance.

ST. LOUIS, May 4, 1883.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

Is there any redress for people living in a neighborhood where two savage, unlicensed dogs are kept, and where persons cannot pass through the alley or adjoining vacant lot without being assailed by these vicious brutes? Complaints have been made to the police, but without effect. So, not knowing what else to do, I thought I would ask for further information through your columns. INQUIRER.

[The police ought to protect you, but if they don't hire a private dog-killer.—ED. P.-D.]

A Princely Salary.

From the New York Herald.

A young lady from New Haven recently applied in this city for a position as nursery governess. She was informed that she must give her whole time to the three darlings, sleeping and eating with them, bathing them, cleaning their room, walking out of doors with them, teaching them all the English branches, Parisian French, correct German, perfect technique on the piano, and elegant manners, and when not sewing for them assisting with the family sewing, besides dressing herself well. She was to have no "outs," and if upon trial she suited she might receive as much as $16 a month.

Died Too Soon.

Old Scores.

From the Lynn Bee.

The custom of offering prizes to the handsomest woman and the homeliest man is again coming in vogue at fairs, the decision being reached by ballot, at ten cents a vote. This feature provides an excellent opportunity for paying off old scores.

SATURDAY CHAT.

I AM glad to hear that one of the few great names in the history of St. Louis is to receive some notice, although it be tardy and transitory and insufficient. There is some talk of organizing a Pontiac Club, and if it does nothing more it may serve to commemorate the name of a hero whose failure and ignoble death have not obscured his real greatness. Parkman's "History of the Conspiracy of Pontiac" tells the story of one of the most remarkable characters in American annals. His conspiracy was the last great movement of resistance against England, and, though he failed in his attempted surprise of Detroit, he struck a blow at English power such as it had never felt before. When he retreated from Detroit, baffled and broken-hearted, he sought a refuge in St. Louis at the invitation of his old friend, St. Ange de Bellevire. Here he wandered up and down the village streets, abandoning himself to grief and melancholy. Across the river lay the territory of his hated English foes, and one sad day he was lured over to Cahokia against the remonstrances of his friends, and there, after he had been stupefied with drink, an English trader settled an old feud by plunging a knife in his heart. His body was brought to St. Louis by his good friend, St. Ange de Bellevire, and decently buried, but his bones have been scattered by the vandal hand of the builder, and now there is not a vestige or memorial of him in the city. There was once a Pontiac street, but, in the revision of the street names, our City Council discovered that Pontiac had no vote, and obliterated even this memento of the fierce Cæsar of the Ottawas.

HUMBOLDT and Shakspeare are well placed in effigy in Tower Grove Park, Washington and Benton in Lafayette Park and Edward Bates in Forest Park, but the real father of St. Louis and the one most worthy of a monument is that brave, kindly, gentle old chevalier, Louis St. Aage de Bellevire. Few people know how much the city owes to him, but the accident of its foundation at the time of the French cession to England of all the land east of the Mississippi made it the refuge of all the French from Kaskaskia, Fort Chartres and Cahokia who would not submit to English rule, and who came here ignorant that their false monarch had secretly sold St. Louis to the Spaniard. The city at once outgrew its trading post idea, but without organization, settled authority or law of any kind. Fortunately, among those who came was St. Ange, the sturdy commandant of Fort Chartres, and he was at once chosen by common consent as the head man of the settlement, and his career proved the fitness of the choice. He made the laws, gave justice, ruled like an Arcadian patriarch and even gave land titles, which stand to-day, though he never claimed any official title or authority; yet no act of his was ever questioned.

ST. LOUIS was four years old before Rios came up from New Orleans as the deputy of Ulloa, the Spanish Governor. He found St. Ange in charge and left him in charge. Laclede was seldom here, his fur-trading keeping him on the move, and Auguste Chouteau was a boy of eighteen. When the fierce revenge of O'Reilly showed New Orleans that resistance to Spain was futile and St. Louis had no choice but to accept the new regime, St. Ange became the father of the people. To protect his fellow-countrymen he entered the service of His Catholic Majesty, accepted a commission as Captain and until his death ruled in love and gentleness the young colony. He dwelt in the house of old Madame Chouteau, where he died at the age of seventy-four, full of years and honors, but poor in this world's goods, his modest fortune going by his will to discharge his little debts and to pay masses for a heroic soul that had fairly earned its reward. There is no name in our history more worthy of veneration, and yet even his burial place was forgotten and the sordid walls of trade rise over a grave which should be historic. By an absurd coincidence, he, like his friend Pontiac, once had a street named after him, only to have municipal blockheads change it from St. Ange avenue to St. Anges avenue, and under the impression that the street was named after the Holy Angels, the church of the Holy Angels was so named. The Philistinism of St. Louis has much to answer for.

TALLY-HOING, except as an aristocratic pastime, is falling into decline in England. I saw a note in an English paper the other day to the effect that all the regular fashionable coaching lines would be abandoned this season save one. The amusement has grown to be too expensive save for a few noblemen with princely incomes. The Elks of this city are still able to indulge the luxury of a four-in-hand. Their coach has been put in excellent repair, and it is expected that it will be out of the shops in a few days in fine colors. The streets are an insuperable objection to coaching now, but when Pine and Locust streets are smooth with asphaltum the Tally-ho will be regarded as a good investment.

IT is really provoking that there is no nice, cosy restaurant in St. Louis, where gentlemen and ladies can have clean, wholesome meals served from white table-cloths and æsthetic ware, where carpets are inviting, and the odors appetizing. The Southern Hotel Café is the only approach to a good public restaurant that we have in the city. Splendid meals are served there, but the place is large and draughty, and there is no suggestion of comfort about it. By the way, I understand that the café of the hotel will soon be moved to the Fifth street side, taking the place of the barber shop and bath-rooms. It will here be in full view of the Olympic, and in position to attract the people who like nice suppers after the theater. The Delmonico Restaurant, on the Olive street road, is excellently managed. The cooking is superb, and the service good, but it isn't every lover of good living who can afford to drive out there of an evening for a gastronomic treat.

THE androgynous Dude—the real thing, so familiar to the eyes of theater-goers in New York—has not developed in St. Louis yet, but there was a good parade of the embryotic birds at the Grand Opera-house this week. The two or three pretty girls of the "Rice Surprise Party" brought them out in force. They filled the conspicuous parts of the house, smoked their little cigarettes between acts, simpered and ogled the girls and altogether behaved in the most dudish manner. They have brought the skin-tight trousers down to perfection, and at the present rate of progress the opening of the theatrical season in the fall will find at least a half dozen of the "deah boys" ready to don their cover-coats and exhibit their drooping swallow-tails from the rear.

NOW that historic justice has spread its white-wash over the fame of Nero and Lucretia Borgia and Judas Iscariot and other victims of miswritten history, I think the Historical Society cannot do better than attempt to clear the character of Don Fernando de Leyba, sometime Governor in this town, and doubtless a worthy man, but one who has figured all through St. Louis history as a sort of stage villain. He was buried in the old village church, according to Father Bernard's certificate, which runs as follows:

In the year 1780, on the 28th of June, I, a Capuchin priest and apostolic missionary, curate of St. Louis, county of Illinois, province of Louisiana, bishopric of Cuba, have buried in this church, immediately opposite the balustrade on the right, the body of Don Fernando de Leyba, Captain of Infantry in the battalion of Louisiana, and the Commandant of this post, having received all the sacraments of our Holy Mother the Church.

He died a good Christian, and yet tradition will have it that he poisoned himself in despair, because he had failed to betray the town to the savages; that he had sold the powder of the garrison to traders, who supplied the enemy with it; that he trained the cannon of the rickety rampart on the French soldiers, and tried to kill them, all of which must be untrue. There was little love lost between Spanish Commandant and French subjects, but the atrocities ascribed to De Leyba are impossible on their face, and his memory should have justice done it.

I HAVE a word of advice to give to the young gentlemen who are about to start the new club. It is even Punch's advice to the young couple about to marry: "Don't." Why not? Because you can not combine the comforts of a home and splendors of a club on $40 a year. This thing of trying a "limited membership," and a "strictly representative class," and all that sort of thing, has been tried and it will not work. Next to a newspaper which has been started to supply a want long felt in the community, a club composed of a strictly representative class of members is the most expensive institution in the world. I can say with the man who declared that honesty was the best policy, "I have tried both." As a matter of fact there are more clubs in St. Louis than are paying, and a new one has as much chance as a poor boy at a church fair.

PERSONAL POINTS.

—A Georgia young lady is raising four acres of onions in order to obtain $1,000.

—Just now the commencement orator is busy shaking his fist at his looking-glass.

—English ladies who ride wear high Wellington boots and wash leather trousers. London Queen prefers soft woolen twill made expressly for the purpose.

—Archer, the English jockey, has now received fresh honors, being made the leading personag in a new comic opera lately produced at the Royalty Theater in London.

—C. W. Couldock, the veteran actor, now in his sixty-eighth year, will sail for England on June 5, to visit two sisters, one of whom he has not seen for forty years. He will be absent from New York, where he lives, eight or ten weeks.

—A pretty schoolmistress of 18 years in Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, has been before the Police Court on the charge of dislocating the left shoulder of a 14-year-old pupil in punishing him for an infraction of the school rules.

—Joseph Jefferson has just left his home in Iberia parish, La., to fulfill some professional engagements. The comedian is greatly beloved by his Southern neighbors, who declare with enthusiasm, "He is just the whitest man that ever lived in this country."

—The fame of an American lady doctor is declared by Nature to have "spread far and wide over North China." Her name is Miss Howard. Some time ago she attended the mother of Li Hung Chang, the great Viceroy, and now she is treating his wife.

—"Count Sawa" is the name under which Prince Takehito is registered at one of the New York hotels. Prince Takehito is the adopted son of the Emperor of Japan, whom he will succeed upon the throne. He is on his way home from Europe, where he has been at school.

—Andrew J. Bletnen, a lawyer, went from Maine to Missouri a few years ago, where he drifted into newspaper life. He is now getting rich as the manager of the Kansas City Journal, and has just given the seminary at Kent's Hill, Me., $2,000 towards building a president's house.

—Sir Philip H. Clarke, of London, has reported to the British syndicate which sent him to Florida in favor of purchasing 80,000 acres of land in St. John's county. The land is a portion of the Dsston tract, and is said to be fertile and covered with a fine growth of yellow pine and cypress.

—Eugene Field is in luck. The bread he has charitably cast upon the waters is coming back to him. A seedy and needy prospector to whom he lent five dollars when he first reached Denver has since struck it rich, and there is a report that he has given Eugene a half interest in a mine that is "paying big."

—Charles Lowther, younger brother of Lord Lonsdale and heir to the earldom, as the present Earl has no children, is seriously ill. "Charley" Lowther is the member of his interesting family who went round the country as a nigger minstrel, married a music hall singer and had the memorable law-suit with a dog fancier.

—Lord Avonmore, once known as the Hon. Major Yelverton, died the other day at Biarritz. He was the hero of the Yelverton cause célèbre in which he said in the witness box that he did not think promises to marry were valid when made to a person not of "gentle blood," a queer remark from one whose nobility only dates from Barry Yelverton, a successful lawyer and the son of a man who began life as a butcher's boy.

—When the daughter of Lady Gordon eloped it became necessary to apprise her mother of the fact. Her daughter had run away with a young Lord with whom she had been dancing at a ball given by the Duke of Devonshire. "Oh! heavens," cried the poor mother, "on such a cold night, too, and without her flannel petticoat! And to think that it is all my fault, because I wanted to set off the delicacy of her shape to catch the Duke of Bedford."

A FEAST FOR EYE AND EAR.

The Annual Musical Rehearsal of the Mary Institute.

The stage in the large hall of the Mary Institute presented, last evening, a scene of rare beauty. Seated upon it arranged in classes, were groups of girls richly and becomingly attired—the flower and promise of the homes of the West End. There were probably three hundred or more—from the youngest pupils of the school up to the embryo graduate. It was a joyous company, exhibiting the proper freedom with the quiet, but firm discipline and uncompromising thoroughness which are prevailing characteristics of this model school. There was a long and varied musical programme designed to indicate the progress rather than the proficiency of the pupils, as a matter of particular interest to the friends and patrons of the school, who were present in such numbers as to occupy nearly every available inch of space on the floor of the auditorium. But so judiciously were the selections made and so meritorious was the performance that the rehearsal proved a most satisfying entertainment to the entire audience. Many of the pieces were received with spontaneous demonstrations of enthusiasm that were abundantly deserved; for much of the chorus work was simply superb. In justice to the faithful and successful teacher, it needs, also, to be mentioned in this connection, that the choruses were not sung by the best pupils only, but—exclusive of the primary grades—by the whole school; and in such a number there must be many an unmusical and untrue voice, whose effect was anything else than helpful to the general good result. Of this occasion it may be truthfully said that, in breadth, volume and purity of tone, it was a marked advance upon any previous public rehearsal, a fact which not only speaks volumes for it, but evidences the steady progress the Mary Institute classes are making under Mrs. Brainard's judicious methods. The POST-DISPATCH has said before now that the Mary Institute music classes may safely challenge comparison with those of any other girls' school East or West. The brilliant success of last evening emphasizes and confirms this statement.

Jocko, the Huge Orang-Outang.

THE

Orang-

Outang.

From the N. Y. Sun, Feb. 4.

The largest Orang-Outang ever brought to this country was received a few days ago by Mr. Richie, the animal and bird importer. It is an adult male, and reached here within about six weeks after its capture in an African forest. When the close front of its box was taken off the sight of men aroused it to paroxysms of rage. It would alternately squeal like a cornered rat and grunt like an angry boar. In a couple of days, however, it made an exception in favor of its keeper, a sturdy German, who supplied its frequent meals of date, bananas, and egg yelks beaten up with sugar. Then it began to demonstrate a lively curiosity about its surroundings, and seemed to cogitate upon the problem: "What sort of a place have I got into?" When a colored man passed before it a few days ago it showed pleasure, and appeared to recognize in him the sort of human being it had been used to in its native jungle.

This rare and most wonderful Creature is now on exhibition at the Fourth Street Dime Museum, near Walnut.

NO LADY can afford to be without the new High Arm Howe. Office, 921 Olive st.

THE WORLD'S WONDER.

I will say to ladies that do not want to fit on their dresses and have a perfect fit that the only true system is D. W. Moody's perfect tailor system, one that the world approves of. I do not say these words only on proof, as I have cut 1,000 dresses and taught 800 scholars in St. Louis. I do not say to you come and have a pattern cut, but say come and cut your own pattern, and then you will know how to cut for any lady in the world. I am proud to say that hundreds of ladies can make their own dresses, and hundreds of girls have and are making a good living from the fast method of dress-making and D. W. Moody's great invention of dress-cutting. I challenge S. T. Tailor's and Worth's, or any other system or chart, to stand and cut against D. W. Moody's tailor system of dress-cutting. Wanted—One hundred ladies and girls to learn, as I am prepared to teach such a class at the well-established school. I have not invented this great system, and am not afraid to use my name, as those that have invented charts. I have not cheated nor made false promises, and I am a resident of St. Louis and use my own name. Mrs. E. M. McCarthy, 1343 N. 17th st. Take 4th and Locust and Cass av. cars.

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

State of Missouri, City of St. Louis—ss.
In the Circuit Court, City of St. Louis,
April Term, 1883.
Friday, April 13, 1883.
Louisa Rieckhoff
vs.
Wilhelm Rieckhoff.

It appearing from the affidavit to the petition in this cause that the defendant has absented himself from his usual place of abode in the State of Missouri, so that the ordinary process of law cannot be served upon him, therefore, on motion of the plaintiff by her attorney,

It is ordered that said defendant be notified that a civil action has been commenced against him, the object and general nature of which is to obtain a decree of divorce from the bonds of matrimony existing between plaintiff and defendant, on the ground that the defendant has absented himself from the plaintiff without a reasonable cause for the space of one year, before the commencement of this suit, and for more than one year has neglected and refused to provide for the support of his family.

And unless he appear at the term of this court, to be begun and held at the city of St. Louis on the first Monday of June next, and on or before the third day thereof answer the plaintiff's petition, the same will be taken against him as confessed.

And it is further ordered that a copy hereof be published according to law in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, a newspaper printed and published in the city of St. Louis.

George Peter Stubendordt
vs.
Katharina Stubendordt.

It appearing from the petition herein verified by affidavit that the defendant is a non-resident of the State of Missouri, on motion of plaintiff, by attorney,

It is ordered that said defendant be notified that a civil action has been commenced against her, the object and general nature of which is to obtain a decree of divorce from the bonds of matrimony existing between plaintiff and defendant, on the ground that defendant has absented herself from the plaintiff without reasonable cause for the space of one year, and has conducted herself in an indecent, rude and disreputable manner as to render plaintiff's condition intolerable.

And unless she appear at the term of this court to be begun and held at the city of St. Louis on the first Monday of June next, and on or before the third day thereof answer the plaintiff's petition, the same will be taken against her as confessed.

A STRANGE EXPERIENCE.

Sight Given to a Sexuagenarian Who Was Born Blind.

From the Philadelphia Record, April 29.

A old colored woman was sewing by the light of an oil lamp in the front room of a small house on Centre street, near Ely, Germantown, last evening. There was something decidedly wonderful in this fact, commonplace as it might at first appear. The woman, Mrs. Harriet Holmes, who is sixty years old, was blind from her birth until three weeks ago. Mrs. Holmes was born near Cambridge, on the "East'n Sho' " of Maryland, and came to Philadelphia about three years ago to live with some relatives in Germantown. She was several times taken to the Germantown Hospital, on Penn street, and became known in that institution as "Blind Aunt Harriet." Dr. L. W. Fox, one of the surgeons at the Hospital, was attracted by the peculiarity in the formation of her eyes, and made an examination which convinced him that her sight might be restored. The old woman's consent to an operation was not obtained without difficulty, as she said she was "dreadfully afeared of dem cutten doctors." She, however, found the operation quite painless. Her eyes were bandaged for eight days, and she was confined in a very dark room for several days afterward. When the bandages were taken off she was astonished. Although the room was dark she could see objects several feet distant, but quite indistinctly or "all mixed up," as she afterwards declared.

Dr. Fox was delighted at the success of the operation, which consisted in the removal of a cataract from the left eye by what is known as "Grarbi's method," and awaited with great interest the arrival of the time when his subject could be taken into the light. At last she was removed to one of the wards of the hospital which looked upon the street, and the bandage was removed. The patient started violently, and cried out as if with fear, and for a moment was quite nervous from the effects of the shock. For the first time in her life she looked upon the earth. The first thing she noticed was a little flock of sparrows. In relating her experience to a reporter last night she said that she thought they were tea-cups, although, strange to say, a few moments afterward she readily distinguished a watch which was shown her. It is supposed that this recognition was owing to the fact that she heard its ticking and at once associated the two together.

"It seemed kinder queer," she said to the reporter, "but I knowed things putty quick." It appears that she was soon able to distinguish those objects which she had been accustomed to handle, such as a chair, a door or a table. She said that everything seemed pretty, and although at first all objects appeared to her bright and shining like gold, she soon became accustomed to colors, and can now distinguish them very well. For a long time distant objects appeared so near that she thought that she could touch them. She begins to distinguish distances, if not too great. Owing to her first impression of distance she was for some time afraid to walk with her eyes open, the ground and floor appearing a "fur way off," in strange contrast with her impression of distant objects. The popular impression that a person born blind who is restored to sight imagines that men and women are walking on their heads and trees look like elephants was not verified in her case, although she even now makes mistakes quite as ludicrous as in the case of the mistake of the birds for tea-cups. The blaze from a lamp excited the most lively surprise in her mind. She had no idea what it was, and when it was brought near her wanted to pick it up. When night approached upon the day when she first used her eyes, she was in a fright, fearing that she was losing the sight which she had so wonderfully found after sixty years of darkness.

CONJUGAL COMPLICATION.

A Louisville Elopement and Its Very Queer Results.

From the Louisville Courier-Journal.

Jacob Meyers lives on Jefferson street, near Brook, and makes his living by selling the products of the garden. His wife is a handsome brunette of about thirty-five summers. They have five children, the eldest being a girl about seventeen years of age. David Schoff and his wife lived on Brook street, near Jefferson, and have one child. The two families were intimate, and the wives were considered the best of friends. About a month ago Meyers awoke early one morning to attend the sale of his vegetables, and found his wife gone. She had stolen away in the night, and gone he knew not where. The same morning Mrs. Schoff found her husband missing. The coming night brought neither of the missing ones to their homes, and, when the deserted husband and the abandoned wife learned of what had happened in the home of each, they suspected that Schoff and Mrs. Meyers had eloped. Their suspicions were confirmed; Meyers had lost a wife and Mrs. Schoff a husband. He was a deserted husband and she a forsaken wife; and it appeared to them that they could find consolation in each other. He would find a wife in her, and she a husband in him, and the children would have both a father and mother.

In a few days Mrs. Schoff and Mr. Meyers were living in the same house, and, so far as the people could see, were to each other as man and wife. In two weeks their former loves seemed forgotten. They were happy in their home, and were preparing to retire on Saturday night when some one knocked for admittance at the outer door. Mr. Meyers opened it, and into the light came the face and figure of the wife who had deserted him. She had repented of her sin and came home to be forgiven. At his feet she fell and pleaded to be taken back to his arms and home. She pleaded so and was so penitent that he forgave her, but could not take her back and restore her to her former place. Mrs. Schoff had been instituted there, and he was contented to see her remain. For her children's sake Mrs. Meyers begged to be allowed to remain, and her husband granted her the privilege of staying in the house and playing second fiddle. Thus matters stand in the Meyers home. The wife looks after the children she has wronged by her desertion, and, to all intents and purposes, plays the part of a housekeeper and servant. She sleeps in a small room up-stairs to herself, while her husband and the woman that she has wronged by the same chamber together. No one knows what has become of Schoff. He was left in the country and has not appeared since Mrs. Meyers returned home. How long the present state of affairs will remain can only be surmised. The wife, humble and penitent, is thankful to be allowed to remain in the house in any position, while Mrs. Schoff does not seem inclined to retire from her position of mistress of the Meyers family.

Capital Punishment in Germany.

Berlin Dispatch to the London Times.

In connection with the decapitation yesterday of Conrad, it is pointed out that this is the tenth execution of the kind since 1878, when Hodel was beheaded under the Regency of the Crown Prince. The Emperor has always been averse to capital punishment, and between 1868 and 1878 no murderers suffered the extreme penalty of the law. In the former year, of 61 capital sentences, only 4 were carried out, in 1867 only 5 out of 52, in 1866 only 4 out of 29, in 1865 8 out of 39, and in 1864 5 out of 37. So that in the period from 1864 to 1868, of 218 persons condemned to death, only 26 were executed, while 3 died before execution could be performed, and 2 committed suicide, the sentences of all the others being commuted by the Emperor-King into penal servitude for life. From 1869 to 1877, inclusive, 428 criminals in Prussia were condemned to death, and of these not one was led to the scaffold. The case of the assassin Hodel broke the continuity of this humane administration of the law, but in the same year, 1878, there were fifty-three cases of commutation. During the years 1879 and 1880 only one capital sentence out of eighteen was executed, while there were four executions in each of the years 1881 and 1882.

THE DEAF HEAR.

Sixty Eyes Straightened in an Hour.

The Marvelous Skill of a Renowned Physician —Some Wonderful Cures.

Any exhibition of human skill is an interesting sight at all times, but when that skill is put to the test of successfully battling with the mysterious forces of disease and deformity, when the knowledge and experience of one man, gained by long years of practice, are required to decide almost on the instant just where the weak point of the enemy to human life and health is located, and rapidly to dislodge the aggravating cause, often under circumstances in which the greatest dexterity and delicacy of touch is absolutely necessary, and when the slightest quiver of a muscle, or a motion varying a hairbreadth from the proper line may prove disastrous and fatal, the interest in the uniformly successful accomplishment of such feats is vastly increased. The public are already familiar with the unparalleled success of Dr. Hartman in the treatment of numerous cases of chronic diseases of long standing in his special line of practice, but the element in his success which borders on the marvelous is the rapidity with which he operates, and that, too, without a single mistake ever occurring in an immense number of cases treated. It is not often that any one is accorded the privilege of witnessing such exhibitions, but a POST-DISPATCH reporter was allowed to remain in the Doctor's office during the greater part of one day's practice, and nothing but the evidence of his own sight could convince him that such things, bordering on the marvelous, could be. Dr. Hartman deserves the soubriquet of "Wonderful," which many of his patients have given him. The reporter noted down the following list of cases in the order in which they were treated by him: About 8 o'clock in the morning the office was opened to patients and the first case which came under his observation was that of a young lad about twelve years of age, brought in by a elderly lady. The boy had been suffering for several years with a tape-worm. Dr. Hartman gave the lady a prescription to administer to the patient and at 2 o'clock the same day the lady returned with a monster tape-worm, or white snake as it might be called, enclosed in a large bottle, the head, tail and all complete. It is difficult to conceive how any human being can live with such an immense parasite draining the system. Anyone who will call at the Doctor's office can see the worm and can obtain the name and address of the party. The reporter asked Dr. Hartman whether he often prescribed for such cases.

"Oh, yes," he said, "by the hundreds, and always with the same result."

But the Doctor has never said anything about them before, because he doesn't like to see such accounts in the papers.

Next came George Sauerbaum, residing at 1929 Carr street, who is an old patient of Dr. Hartman. He stated that he had suffered most intensely from chronic catarrh of the head and lungs, but is now almost cured, his lungs being entirely well and his head greatly improved. The gratitude of this gentleman was almost boundless, and he expressed it to the reporter in the strongest terms.

A six-year-old daughter of Mrs. Henry Hoffman, residing at 1819 South Seventh street, was the next patient. The little girl had a cancerous tumor in the outside corner of the eye, pushing the eye in toward the nose and giving it a most ghastly and unsightly appearance. Dr. Hartman separated the lids and removed the tumor in almost no time. The rapidity of the operation can scarcely be conceived.

Two middle ladies aged about nine and ten years then appeared, both having cross-eyes. As Dr. Hartman found one a very mild case and the other of recent standing he did not think it necessary to operate and treated both of them with glasses and other means, which, he said, within six months or a year would make them more perfect than an operation could.

A man next appeared with a vertical curvature of the spine, of which Dr. Hartman made a draught, took measurements and directed the patient to return in two weeks, when he would adjust the appliances, which would then be ready.

The next patient was Katie King, of No. 14 Targee street, who had very crossed eyes. Dr. Hartman straightened them in a twinkling, and when the operation was completed a physician standing by with watch in hand said that it took him just thirty-two seconds.

"Oh!" said Dr. Hartman, laughing, "if I had known you were timing me I could have done better still."

The young lady declared that if it was known what a short time it required and how little pain it occasioned to straighten eyes every person in the United States, suffering in this way would hasten to Dr. Hartman to have their eyes straightened.

After this case a large number of cases were treated of chronic catarrh, consumption, dropsy, one running sores on limbs. Some of the sufferers were old patients and some were new. The treatment of the former was continued and the latter were taken in hand by the Doctor. The reporter expressed himself to the reporter as perfectly delighted with the success of Dr. Hartman's treatment.

The next case that the reporter observed particularly was that of a thirteen-year-old son of Lawrence Bergenmeyer, who was suffering with necrosis of the knee (old running bone sores). The boy was placed under treatment after the examination, and Dr. Hartman declared that his cases were curable if the treatment was continued long enough.

Then a young man with his eyes very badly crossed and a young lady in the same condition had their eyes quickly straightened. Neither of them would allow their names to be mentioned in the paper but they said they were charmed with the result of the operations.

Mrs. Sibley Reardon, of Carondelet, had his eyes turned apart in a most disfiguring manner, but one minute under Dr. Hartman's skillful hands not only straightened his eyes, but made him the happiest man the reporter ever saw.

Dr. Hartman next quickly removed a tumor from the eyelid of a young man who had not been able to open his eye for years. Immediately after the operation the eye was opened easily and the young man in his delight remarked that, although he did not want his name mentioned, he would fill the Doctor's office with patients for a week to come.

William Larkins, of the steamer Charles P. Chouteau, had badly crossed eyes for over thirty years, but in less than a minute Dr. Hartman had them straightened, and the delight of Mr. Larkins was almost inexpressible.

Two patients with spinal disease next came seeking relief. One had lateral curvature of the spine, one shoulder being elevated, and the other had angular curvature with a hump. One case Dr. Hartman pronounced curable and the other he said could be greatly improved; so draughts were taken and measurements made for appliances. The most remarkable case, however, which came under the observation of the reporter was that of a man totally deaf in one ear and so deaf in the other that the ticking of a clock could not be heard. After Dr. Hartman had worked only fifteen minutes, the man could plainly hear the ticking of a watch in both ears. This patient was so overjoyed at the result of the treatment that he offered to pay the Doctor $100, but he refused to take more than his usual fee.

After a momentary operation on the eyes of Mr. William Hart, of Alton, Ill., whose eyes were very much crossed, made them perfect and greatly improved his appearance and a similar operation on Mary Wylie Henderson, of Warrenton, Mo., made his eyes, which were crossed, as straight as any.

The reporter had been led to believe by what he had heard and read that Dr. Hartman's treatment had accomplished wonders, but this belief was confirmed beyond the possibility of a doubt by the evidence of his senses in the exhibitions of the Doctor's marvelous skill which he was permitted to witness. The only natural conclusion from such results is that in his particular specialties Dr. Hartman is not only second to no physician in the land, but is fully the equal if not the superior of the best of them.

Dr. Hartman has stated previously that his stay in this city would end with this week, but at the earnest solicitation of a large number of patients and of several physicians, he has consented to remain another month only; but he has positively refused to prolong it beyond the end of June. This will give him ample time to cure all cases in his line of practice within a radius of three hundred miles of St. Louis, as to straighten crossed or crooked eye, never requires more than one minute of time, and hence sixty cases can be disposed of easily in the space of an hour, and he never requires more than three minutes for any other cases—such as cataract in the eye, inverted lids, ptosis (falling of the eye-lids), tumors on the eyes, exterpitation of the eyeball and others of a similar nature.

For one month more, then, Dr. Hartman will be at his office, room 4, Lindell Hotel, where all suffering from complaints of the above nature can find him.

GALENA, KAS., May 4.—The much-needed rain came last night, and was quite general.——The District Court has adjourned until next August.——A small box was found yesterday, a short distance from the city, which contained a dead male fœtis, which showed marks of foul work. An inquest was held over the body, the result of which is unknown. The officers are working up the matter, and think they have the guilty party spotted.——The C. & W. Club effected a permanent organization last night, and elected E. S. Noble, president; Tom Hardwick, vice-president; Charles Sawyer, secretary, and J. J. Thompson treasurer.——Public School reopens next Monday morning.——The City Council meets to-night, to appoint city officers, and knowing ones say that G. W. Webb will be appointed Attorney; Graham Lowdermilk, Marshal, and H. A. Bender, Clerk.

America's Greatest Actresses.

"Gath's" Review of the Cincinnati Dramatic Festival.

Miss Anderson has beauty, especially of height and proportion, rare beauty, and it was seldom better dressed. She has also beauty of face, although her features lack the large expressiveness of the queens of English tragedy. Her fine eyes are rather close together; their eloquence is sometimes of the fox or ferret kind. She played "Desdemona" sweetly to the eye, notwithstanding a angular, and often unmeaning use of her arms, and at one place, throwing her deep and powerful voice out as from a cornet, electrified the whole house and brought tears to many. It was still the "Desdemona" of the runaway girl—the purest emotional and not the deeply-characterized heroine.

Miss Clara Morris alone of the conspicuous stars seemed to know how to walk on the stage. She was more the mistress of the boards, most actual and real, notwithstanding the slight nasal she had to play, than either men or women there. A certain flavor of the amateur performance that enshrined the general laborers was missing here. She might have taught something to all in the best of grace, nature and smoothly-flowing spirit, rising at the proper times to tender and eloquent power. If I might so express it, a metropolitan, world-easy style was hers exceptionally. At places where the text did not vouchsafe her a word she made her fingers and eyes speak in thorough characters. Her voice is pitched in the key of this planet; she only needed a full part to carry away the honors of the night. Her friends observed with joy, that she is recovering form, color and aplomb, and rapidly losing the cerements of invalid life. I heard Mrs. Norton, the wife of the prosperous manager of the St. Louis theaters, say at the close of the performance that Clara Morris always gave her something to study and take away, and to remind her that the theater could be the home of nature, as well as art. The only signs of original "business" in the piece, this alert and observant artist made.

Edward McKenna, a bricklayer employed on Dixon & Young's new building, Main and Cornet streets, was descending in the elevator, when it became unmanageable and rushed down with such rapidity that McKenna was thrown fifteen feet in the air and outside of the elevator, and on striking the ground his left knee cap was broken. He was removed to his home, Twelfth and St. Louis avenue.

CARONDELET JOTTINGS.

The new depot of the East Carondelet and Belleville Branch railroad will be completed next week.

Joseph Marshall, this morning, found the body of a man in the river at the foot of Elwood street. He was dressed in dark clothes and cotton shirt. The body was very much decomposed.

The organization of the Union Steel Workers having disbanded, it is now a question as to whether or not the men will offer to go to work at the Vulcan, and whether, if they offer to, the company will accept their services. One of the men said to the reporter that he was now a hod-carrier at $2 per day and would continue so doing before he would go to work at the Vulcan, though he could make $6 there.

Events of the Week in Fashionable Circles.

Entertainments—Dinner Parties—On Dits—Personal Paragraphs—Departures—Notes.

At the Fassett-Singleton wedding last week an old-time family custom was observed. Instead of a "reception" there was a "marriage feast," the guests being seated at three successive tables, the bride and groom presiding at each end. At the first was seated the oldest and most distinguished guests; at the second were the married people, and at the third were the young people, companions and friends of the young couple.

Mr. and Mrs. George, nee Annie Jacobs, of Normandy, St. Louis county, have returned from their bridal tour, and are established at their new home at Kansas City. Last Wednesday evening they gave a theater party and petit-souper complimentary to Mrs. Fred Paramore, and Miss Marie Flannigam, who were visiting Kansas City.

The beaded Jersey, or jet cuirass jacket, is the most stylish and beautiful spring garment that has made its appearance. Miss Lizzie Johnson wore one of them to the Dousman reception. Miss Lily McLellan also wore one on Tuesday evening at the Grand Opera-house. They are destined to great popularity, as they are becoming to all styles.

In the Kansas City Herald appears the following paragraph, headed "A National Beauty:" "Mrs. Nellie Hazeltine Paramore, the celebrated belle of St. Louis, and famous beauty, arrived in the city last Sunday, and is now making her first visit here, winning friends rapidly as much by her charm and grace of manner as captivating by her beauty, which is in outline Grecian, while her hair is the pure Titiens hue, her eyes are dark liquid brown, and wonderfully soft. In her honor a number of entertainments have been given, receptions, luncheons, opera parties, and a musicale at the Coates House, where the versatile beauty favored the guests with a piano solo and a Shaksperean recitation." The officers of Fort Leavenworth also gave a ball complimentary to Mrs. Paramore and her friends, Mrs. Curtis and Miss Marie Flannigan, of St. Louis, to which they were accompanied by a party of guests from Kansas City. Their arrival created a pleasant ripple in the quiet garrison circles.

Miss Ella Sturgiss left this week for her home at Washington, to the regret of her many friends. During her visit here she was the recipient of many elegant entertainments in her honor, luncheons, dinners, dejeuners teas and receptions having followed each other in rapid succession. Mrs. Hercules Dousman leaves soon to join her at Washington.

ENTERTAINMENTS.

The German Club, led by Prof. Soldan, met last week at the residence of the German Consul, Dr. Gerlich. The exercises were very interesting. Besides fine recitations, delivered in beautiful style by the hostess, Mrs. Gerlich, Mrs. Adolphus Meier and Mrs. Joe P. Carr recited with wonderful effect "The Two Lenoras," from Goethe's "Torquato Tasso," Mrs. Carr rendering the lines of the Princess; Mrs. Mier those of Leonora. Mrs. Eustace, Mrs. Elliott and Miss Julia Shepley gave a very humorous selection, a burlesque upon the "Lion and the Glove," from Fliegende Blaetter. Miss Shepley assumed the role of the Princess; Mrs. Elliott, the King, and Miss Eustace, the lover. These ladies entered fully into the humor of the piece, and produced wild bursts of the most hideous designs, cut from pasteboard, which were placed in her hands by the lover. An immense gauntlet was thrown by the Princess in the midst of these ferocious beasts, from which it was rescued by the gallant lover, who threw it in her face, and announced his intention of leaving her side to emigrate to California.

This week Mrs. Henry Lucas entertained the German Club at her lovely home near Normandy. The old Lucas mansion, with its wide halls, large rooms and low ceilings, under the skillful hands of the wood-carver, the decorator and upholsterer, presents a perfect picture of architectural beauty; there is no trifling bric-a-brac or unworthy article of adornment; everything is handsome, solid and substantial, in perfect harmony with the surroundings. Upon this occasion the house was converted into a bower of bloom, and Mesdames Lucas, Harney and Filley stood upon the portico to receive the guests, twenty-three in number, who arrived at Normandy Park upon the 2:59 train. For this entertainment no tasks were set, but each member was expected to contribute something to the entertainment. In response to this call Miss Eustace recited a few beautiful lines from "Heipelin Stermchen," and later "Thou Art Like Unto a Flower;" Mrs. Elliott gave "Joan of Arc," Mrs. Joe Carr, "Schloss Boncourt," Camisso, and Herr Sidan read a scene from "Faust." Misses Daisy Lackland and Laura Richardson contributed some fine vocal and instrumental selections. At 4 o'clock refreshments of sandwiches, salads and coffee, creams, cakes, ices, fruits and wines were served in the large dining-room, which is a perfect picture, beautiful in all its appointments. At 5 o'clock they returned to the city. Among the guests were Herr Soldan, and Mesdames Dr. Gerlich, Dr. Leet, Ike Cook, Wainwright, John Harney, Edgar Lackland, R. J. Lackland, James Richardson, Mier, Joe Carr, Albert Kelley, Wall, Elliott, Sterling, Charlie Filley, and the Misses Laura Richardson, Daisy Lackland, Eustace, Agnes Farrar, Emilie Speck, Marie Patterson, Von Schroeder and others. The next meeting will be at Mrs. John Harney's country residence.

On Tuesday evening Dr. P. S. O'Reilly gave a very elegant dinner to a small party of friends. There were many handsome designs in floral decorations, and choice roses were furnished the ladies and their cavaliers. Dinner was served at 7:30 o'clock. A choice menu, of many courses, with appropriate wines, was interspersed with jests and recitations from Dr. McKellops and others until 12 o'clock, when they left the table. Among the guests were Mr. and Mrs. Walter L. Bartley, Mrs. Dr. Washington, Mrs. Annie Woolridge, Mrs. Eva Grant, Miss Annie Melton, Mrs. Celeste Tracey, Dr. McKellops, Gen. Goodin, Major Doyle and others.

On Sunday Mr. and Mrs. John Ladd entertained Mr. George Griswold, the nephew of Mr. Pierre Lorillard, of New York. After dinner a carriage party was formed for Tower Grove and Forest Parks.

The Kirkwood Cooking Club was delightfully entertained this week by the Misses Morris at their home, "Glendolen," near Woodlawn. An elegant lunch of eight courses was served at 2 o'clock, consisting of all the delicacies of the season. There were present, besides the fair hostess and her sister, the following young ladies, elegantly attired: Miss Gill, of New York; Nannie and Lillie Tompkins, of St. Louis; Misses Brown, Unsell, Scheetz, Brazeau, Mary Gill and Bessie Sutherland. After a final lunch on the 16th the Cooking Club will be converted into a Lawn Tennis Club for the ensuing summer season.

On Wednesday afternoon at 4 o'clock Mrs. Leon Hull assembled a party to "five o'clock tea," at her residence on Olive street. Among the invited guests were Mrs. B. L. Reese, Mrs. John W. Grether, Mrs. Boeck, Mrs. Holmes, Mrs. Geige, Mrs. Houston and Mrs. Smith. Refreshments were served by Mr. Beers "tete-a-tete," with floral decorations for the ladies. The table linen was handsomely embroidered by the hostess.

On Tuesday evening Mrs. Annie Woolridge, No. 2816 Locust street, entertained a small party of ladies and gentlemen in compliment to Mrs. Berthaud and her daughters, Misses Nannie and Birdie Berthaud, prior to their departure for the East. Refreshments of cakes and ices, fruits and wines were served by Mr. Beers. There were present Mrs. Berthaud, Misses Nannie and Birdie Berthaud, Mrs. Dr. Washington and Misses Lettie Davidson, Lillie Woolridge, Nellie and Mamie Schuyler, and Maj. Rapley, Messrs. John Portiss, Randall, John and Taylor Bryan, Al Woolridge, and others.

On Dit.

That the æsthetic young men of a theatrical turn of mind are again having "Lillies for Grubb."

That "gas-light on the gutter" is the newest shade, and in St. Louis the effect is particularly rich.

That the sunflower and the daisy have both been displaced by the "daudy-lion," and it, alas, is becoming a "dude."

That there is trouble in the McCullough Club; all the men want to be girls and go to school, where tolu is "on 'cnange."

That one of the St. Joseph papers makes the announcement that "Miss Cora Baker, the modern Helen, is stopping at the Coates House."

That pretty Miss Marie Flannigan created quite a flutter in the hearts of the "Kindergarten officers" at Fort Leavenworth during her recent visit.

That the West End Club is about to die; that there are many "grave" fears expressed that they are not prepared for it. That their sentiments on this grave subject cannot be obtained, as they are all too full for utterance.

That only one young lady has been found who is not mad at the Republican reporter for his criticism of the "Garden Festival." She is a noted beauty and knows that she got the best of his criticisms during the week.

That the latest thing in church sociables is to station a reliable person at the door with a pair of scales. Each lady is weighed before entering, and her escort is taxed half a cent per pound on her weight, as admission fee. It is not stated that she is weighed upon leaving and the gallant charged double price for all she has gained.

CLUTSVILLE, ALA.—Dr. W. Carter says: "I have used Brown's Iron Bitters in my own family for indigestion, with great benefit."

Dynamite.

From the Philadelphia Press.

Dynamite is one of the many products or combinations of nitro-glycerine, and is about thirteen times as powerful as gunpowder. The discovery of this dangerous and potent explosive was made in 1867 by Ascagne Sobrero, then a pupil in the laboratory of Pelouze, the eminent French chemist, who devoted twenty years of his life to the investigation of the chemistry of oils and fats.

Dynamite was patented in the United States May 26, 1868, the patent being granted to Alfred Nobie, of Hamburg, Germany, assignor of John Bandmann, of San Francisco. It consists of a combination of nitro-glycerine with a substance of great absorbent power, such, for instance, as fuller's earth or rotten stone. By this combination the explosiveness of the nitro-glycerine is controlled, as it were, and the compound is capable of withstanding all the ordinary dangers of transportation, while at the same time its explosive power is not lessened. The process of manufacture is very simple. You take a certain proportion of nitric and sulphuric acid and mix them with certain other proportions of glycerine, which is the essence of fat, to make the nitro-glycerine. To make dynamite you only need to mix nitro-glycerine with some absorbent material—fuller's earth is the best—to have dynamite.

ALL APPROVERS.

British Consul Edwards' Statement About Irishmen in New York.

The Conspiracy was Unearthed Nearly Altogether in America—Sheridan and Walsh Make Statements—O'Donovan Rossa will Not Talk for Fear his Throat will be Cut.

NEW YORK, May 5.—An Englishman now in this city, who has served his Government in an important post, said: "I don't think the extradition of Sheridan and Walsh will be asked for. The best possible reason for this is that the English Government, with the best legal counsel in the world, will not ask for anything which it is unlikely to obtain. Then the case is very similar to several in which the English Government has refused extradition. No man familiar with American affairs will believe that the extradition will be granted if it were asked for.

Gen. Roger A. Pryor, of Mr. Sheridan's counsel said: "I do not now believe that the British Government will demand the extradition of these men, though the fact that it secured their indictment in Dublin looked that way. There may have been one or all of for securing this indictment. In the first place it may have been done to scare them away. Then it may have been done merely to discredit them; or it may have been to prevent their returning to Ireland, I believe the British Government is aware that it cannot secure the extradition of these people."

The British Consul-General said that no instructions had been received from his Government in this matter, and that he had never been instructed to put any of the indicted men under surveillance.

"Is the statement true," a reporter, asked Consul Edwards, at his residence, "that the British conspiracy was unearthed on this side of the water, and that the names of the men were sent from here?"

"It is not true," Mr. Edwards, said "that the names of all the conspirators were sent from here, although several were. It is true, to a great extent, that the conspiracy was unearthed here. An immense amount of information was volunteered to us by Irishmen, and the great difficulty has been to discriminate between that which was true and that which was false. It appeared at one time out of employment in New York seemed to have the impression that he could make $20 or $25 by coming to the British Consul's office and making a statement of an Irish conspiracy. The statements which were true were fully confirmed before the results were sent to the home Government. I will say, in general terms, that this was not, as seems to be believed, the work of English detectives. The Irishmen who made the most important statements did so with the greatest caution, being well aware that they imperilled their lives by their action."

Mr. Sheridan was in consultation in the parlors of the Astor House with Mr. Carroll, his adviser; Augustin Ford of the Irish World, Miss Lord and Mr. Patrick Brennan. Mr. Sheridan said he had received no information of further steps on the part of the British Government. Mr. Carroll said: "There is, of course, no truth in the statement that Mr. Sheridan or any of these men has been arrested. No step of the kind has been attempted. The belief that it will not be is, in my opinion, a mistake. I think that the previous attempt taken in connection with shows that they do intend it. You must remember that over there they do not understand public opinion here as we do. I am satisfied that this Government will never consent to the extradition, however. It is generally conceded that Mr. Tynan, the alleged 'No. 1,' is in New York, but he has no consultation with me in this matter, and I do not know where he resides. I know some things about him which I am not at liberty to state. From his course I conclude that he desires to remain entirely in the background and not to take the position Sheridan and Walsh have taken."

Mr. Brennan said he thought a demand for the extradition of these men would be calculated to strengthen the British Ministry with the people at home.

"What do you think," was asked of O'Donovan Rossa, "of the statement that and is about to turn informer?"

"If that is so," Mr. Rossa said, "the aim of the English Government is to give to the whole crowd of them the character of informers and then let the whole crowd go. I can not tell you anything about Tynan. If I should my throat would be cut."

FINE white pique for aprons, at 5 cents a yard, at John Neun & Co.'s, 1205 South Fifth street, opposite French Market.

A Freak of Nature.

From the Pueblo Chieftain.

One of the strangest and most remarkable freaks of nature we ever saw was received yesterday by Mr. Edward Austin from a friend in New Mexico. It is a root of a pinon-tree, knotted and twisted, but forming a perfect resemblance to two human beings standing face to face with hands clasped and arms extended. It is no fanciful resemblance, but the features, ears, eyes, nose, mouth, arms, legs and body of each are absolutely perfect.

We hardly believe that the ladies of St. Louis are aware of the fact that John Neun & Co., 1205 South Fifth street, opposite French Market, are selling gossamer cloaks for ladies and children at 85 cents apiece.

The Style in Bangs.

New York Letter in Cincinnati Enquirer.

Smooth, straight bangs are likely to be in vogue during the summer, because they give a juvenile effect to most faces and also on account of the ease with which they are kept in order. When arranged in short, curly locks they necessitate the use of curling-irons, which are both bothersome and injurious. This led to the common use of postiches, or false fronts, which are fastened on with fine hairpins and silk thread, while an invisible net keeps the locks secure in windy weather and prevents them from uncurling. A bride's coiffeur is now wavy before and braided behind, ornamental pins being used to fasten the different plaits and to hold on the orange wreath. The varied color powders which I have already mentioned are used with reference to the shade of the hair. Some foolish women are given to wigs when they have plenty of natural covering for their empty heads, and by the aid of falsity in hair and complexion come out one day as a lemon blonde, the next as a strawberry ditto and on the third as a dark brunette. I know a girl who always is sallow and black-haired when on horseback, but at no other time.

RUSHMORE, O.—Dr. A. Page says: "I have prescribed Brown's Iron Bitters in several instances, and in each case obtained good results."

WHITE AND PINK.

Gowns for Young Women Who Are About to Be Graduated.

From the Cincinnati Commercial.

White has long been the conventional commencement dress, but though long honored by custom and favored by the taste of many, it is not absolutely essential that a toilet for this occasion should be white, if a color is more becoming, or there is any other reason why it is preferred. One or two groups of girls in pale rose or blue make a pretty break in the line of snowy toilets. Delicate fabrics in light colors are almost always selected. India mull, plain and polka-dotted, and the many beautiful varieties of nun's veiling, in white, robin's-egg, rose pink, cream, pearl color, strawberry red and corn-flower blue, an extremely stylish new color. Cotton satines in floral patterns are recommended for this purpose, and they are combined with plain satines, which have twilled surfaces closely resembling satin.

The approved style has a sharply pointed basque of figured satine in the beautiful daisy or moss rosebud patterns; pansies or hyacinths and an apron drapery of the same are arranged over a kilt-pleated skirt or a gored skirt trimmed with tucked flounces edged with lace of the plain satine in a solid color to match the groundwork of the figured goods. Foulards also make up prettily in somewhat elaborate short dresses, the watteau or draped polonaise style showing up the floral patterns most effectively. Imported robe dresses with embroidered flounces are shown in colored goods.

There is nothing, however, after all, so fresh and pretty for a young girl as white, and for these effective use is made of deep flounces of embroidery. Often breadths of solid embroidery of Irish point or open Hamburg work are used for the waist and sleeves and panels for the skirt, the point being covered by narrow crosswise ruffles of embroidery. A charming style is called the Phyllis. On the foot of the skirt is a narrow kilting, and above this a flounce of the embroidery, headed by two narrow pleatings and then another embroidered flounce. Above this is a full wrinkled apron, edged with embroidery, and which is pulled up to conceal the edge of the plain basque. The neck is square, edged with the embroidery, which is carried in a full gabot down to the front of the waist, the ends concealed by the apron. This is a style pretty easily managed by home dressmakers.

Quite a number of commencement dresses of white mull or muslin are being made with demi-trains, and if the material is very sheer it is made up over white or colored surah. If expense is to be considered cotton satins look almost as well. A turreted or Breton basque and demi-mot, if white, are pretty over a colored lining with puffs heading each ruffle of embroidery across to the front of the skirt, and ribbon of a color matching the lining run through the puffs and fastened with a bow with long loops, which will form a cascade of ribbon loops on each side of the skirt. The neck of the bodice may be cut low around or high at the back, with an oval or square opening in front. Two narrow ribbons are tied about the throat, with a bow and short ends at the left side.

A Wandering Duke.

From the London Tribune

The Duc de Morny was at the ball of the Duchess of Fernan-Nunez in Paris, and was one of the waltzing partners of the Infanta Paz. This was because his stepfather is Grand Master of Don Alfonso's household. H. R. H., when her family were in exile, often played with le petit Morny. The young Duke has returned from New York enchanted with what befell him there. He was greatly lionized, and the American ladies did not seem to have taken a rigorous view of the Peyghine tragedy. The Duke was, in the States, bitten with the Oscar-Wildism which distinguishes some highly cultivated and wealthy families there. The plum-colored evening coat, ornamented with ruby and sapphire buttons, is to be worn in choice society here. That sumptuous garment was ordered for the Vanderbilt fancy ball. It is not quite bright enough for the Duke's taste. He and some other dandies purpose to wear a red coat with revers, scarlet plush breeches and silk stockings. If they set the fashion a great business must spring up in the manufacture of leg calves. A show of flesh-less tibias would soon put an end to the sumptuary movement which they want to inaugurate. It does not seem to me that a costume which would unite the rig-out of a fox-hunting squire, the old-fashioned uniform of a London postman, the livery of a Parisian cercle and the belongings of the English Miller in the "Domino Noir" would succeed here. The evening apparel, however, of the jeunesse doree will soon be greatly modified. More latitude will be given in the choice of textures. Ruffles may come in again and jeweled studs be no longer monopolized by young Brazilians. I do not see why European sprigs of nobility should not clothe themselves in the garments Japanese Daimios have thrown aside in order to array themselves in magpie black and white, like waiters. There is a large assortment of such costumes at the exhibition in the Galerie Petite, in the Rue de Seze.

Dude and Dudine.

From the Chicago Times.

The dudine, the female dude, has appeared in New York. The dudine wears a mashed gooseberry-colored hat and a high collar; her clothes are a tight fit from neck and hand to bottom; she carries a sharp-pointed parasol in lieu of the dude cane, and is often accompanied by an English pug terrier. Whether she will excite the same amount of interest aroused by the dude is doubtful. Half the beauty of the dude is in his legs. These, covered with skin-tight trousers, are fascinating in their artistic contour and graceful flexibility. Owing to the female attire, the dude has the dudine at a painful disadvantage as regards legs.

Barnum's.

The improvements carried out by the George R. Taylor estate at the well-known hostelry, Barnum's, Walnut and Second streets, have placed that popular establishment in the front rank of hotels of the first-class, offering all modern conveniences. For upwards of a quarter of a century this famous house has enjoyed the patronage of families and the traveling public. It carried in its name the guarantee of comfort and security. The wide reputation of Barnum's rested upon the superior accommodations offered steadily and regularly from year to year. The hotel is celebrated throughout the country for its excellent table. It was long recognized as the leading caravansary in St. Louis and was always selected for the entertainment of royal and distinguished foreign visitors. Conforming to modern ideas of comfort and convenience, several new features have been added to the interior, and the hotel to-day enters upon a fresh lease of popularity under the able management of Capt. Trumpbour, a highly-esteemed veteran in the business. The office has been removed to the ground floor with entrances on Walnut and Second streets. A new and handsome staircase leads to the dining and reception-room floor. At the foot of the ladies' staircase is located the elevator connecting with the six floors above. The rooms are spacious, well ventilated and comfortably furnished, and the apartments on the Walnut street front presenting a southern exposure near the river, are delightfully cool during the heated term. All the conveniences of a first-class hotel are found on the ground floor, drug store, tonsorial and bathing departments, saloon, etc. The house is amply provided with fire escapes and separate staircases, and the boiler and culinary departments are placed in a detatched building. The moderate rates offered at Barnum's commend it to the patronage of the public.

Jefferson City Jottings.

Special Correspondence of the Post-Dispatch.

JEFFERSON CITY, May 4.—In accordance with a special order made by the Supreme Court, the Clerk will set 150 cases, beginning with case numbered 874, as a special docket for Monday, the 7th day of May, 1883, and all cases on this docket which shall be submitted on briefs on or before said day, or on which the attorneys on both sides shall, before this time, file a stipulation for oral argument before the Commissioners hereafter appointed by the court, shall be referred to the Commissioners for disposition under the provisions of "an act to regulate practice in the Supreme Court and to aid in disposing of cases pending in said court," approved March 22, 1883, and all cases on said special docket not so referred will be continued until the October term, 1883.

The State Board of Equalization have been listening all week to arguments from railroad men, relative to the valuation of their property.

Capt. Lewis Bergan, United States Special Swamp Land Agent for this State, is in receipt of a circular from the Department of the Interior, relative to unlawful enclosures of public lands for grazing or other purposes, and setting forth that such encroachments will be prosecuted the same as if they occurred to private individuals.

Sporting News.

The base ball games yesterday resulted in the following scores: At New York—Providence, 11; New York, 3. At Philadelphia—Boston, 11; Philadelphia, 10. At Wilmington, Del.—Quicksteps 14; Actives, 11. At Indianapolis—Indianapolis, 12; Keutons, 6."

THE SHOOTING TOURNAMENT.

The weather yesterday was anything but pleasant for the wing shots at Compton Avenue Park. After several sweepstake shoots the regular programme was resumed at half-past two o'clock, Meaders, Krueger and Cook dividing first money and Howard third. In the fifteenth shoot, which followed, Tieper, Hyman and Kuntz divided the big stake. The first money of the sixteenth shoot was divided between Gates, Kunz and Hopkins. Shoot No. 17 was at ten shingles, twenty-six yards rise.

The day's shoot closed with a miss and out at 31 yards; one money only. Telpel won.

THE RACES.

The races at Nashville were very well attended yesterday: Thora won first race, Orange Blossom, second Highflyer third, and Revenge fourth.

The House Railroad Committee yesterday afternoon considered the Laclede avenue passenger railway bill. The proposed road would extend from King's Highway, by way of Leffingwell avenue, Walnut street, Jefferson avenue, Eugenia street and Clark avenue to Fourth street. The bill provides that the tracks of other companies may be used.

Notice.

On account of the large increase in my confectionery business and store trade, I hereby inform my patrons and the trade in general that I will cease delivering any more bread from Monday, May 7. I shall from now on devote my entire attention to the confectionery and ice cream business; and with the increased facilities I possess I am enabled to guarantee entire satisfaction in that line. Respectfully, LEOPOLD MOHR.

To-morrow morning over thirty new members will be received into membership at Pilgrim Church, the rite of infant baptism and the celebration of the Lord's Supper being observed. In the evening a special young people's service will be held. The pastor, Dr. Goodell's subject will be, "Let Your Lights so Shine—Candles Taken Out From Under a Bushel." The church will be handsomely decorated with flowers and evergreens, and special music has been prepared for the occasion.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Dr. J. W. Allen preaches to-morrow at Jerseyville.

Dr. Cooper preaches at Trenton to-morrow.

Rev. W. H. Illsley, of Carlyle, Ill., was in the city during the week and will spend to-morrow at Carrollton, Ill.

Rev. E. L. Hurd, president of Blackburn University, will preach to-morrow morning and evening at the Glasgow Avenue Church.

The Young People's Association of the Third Congregational Church recently celebrated its first anniversary. About one hundred young people were present to enjoy the occasion.

Rev. C. M. Ware, of the Western Theological Seminary, will to-morrow commence his summer pastorate at the Ferguson church. He returns to the seminary next fall to complete his theological course.

Dr. Niccolls leaves week after next to attend the meeting of the Southern Presbyterian General Assembly, to convene May 15. He has been chosen as chairman of the delegation that is to carry the fraternal solutations of the Northern General Assembly.

Rev. Theodore Clifton preaches a short sermon to-morrow morning in connection with the Lord's Supper and the reception of new members. In the evening his subject will be "The Four Temples." The church, the Third Congregational, is situated on the corner of Grand and Page avenues.

Dr. Niccolls' sermon subject to-morrow evening will be "The Lord's Entreaty." The Sunday evening services at the Second Church, with the special musical features lately adopted, are proving very successful, as is attested by the large and growing audiences.

Last Sabbath was the second anniversary of the pastorate of Rev. H. S. Williams, of the North Presbyterian Church, and the occasion was appropriately observed. The pulpit was elegantly decorated with flowers, and the pastor preached to a very large audience an interesting and appropriate sermon on the words of God to Moses, "Speak to the children of Israel that they go forward." An interesting review of the work of the church during the present pastorate was given, and the people urged to go forward in the good work. The occasion was very interesting and enjoyable, and the outlook of this church is very encouraging.

BAPTIST.

The Ladies' Bethel Aid Society of this city held a meeting in Second Church yesterday afternoon.

The children's May festival of the Second Church netted over $200, which amount will be appropriated for the benefit of the poor.

Rev. J. T. Green, who has been visiting friends at his old pastorate at Fee Fee, returned to his home in Delphi, Ind., last night.

Rev. W. J. Patrick, who for the past week has been holding a series of meetings at the old Fee Fee church, has left for his home in Curryville, Mo.

On Wednesday evening of next week Dr. Boyd delivers the oration before the literary societies of La Grange College, La Grange, Mo.

Dr. Lofton will peach at the Park Avenue Church to-morrow morning on the subject "The Gospel of Blood." In the evening his theme will be "The Tendency of the Mind to Futurity." The ordinance of baptism will be administered at the close of the morning sermon.

A musical and literary entertainment complimentary to Dr. Lofton will be given at the Park Avenue Church on Tuesday evening next. The programme is a most entertaining one, and will be rendered by some of the best talent in the city.

Rev. Dr. Marston, District Secretary of the American Baptist Home Missionary Society, left last week for Eufaula, I. T., to attend and participate in the memorial services of the late Rev. Dr. Buckner; from there he goes to Waco to attend the convention.

Rev. Wm. Harris, of St. Joseph, who has been called recently to the pastorate of the Garrison Avenue Church, is in the city and will preach for the calling congregation tomorrow morning. On Monday he leaves for Waco, Tex., to attend the convention.

Rev. S. L. Helm, D. D., of Kentucky, and Rev. Dr. J. W. M. Williams, of Baltimore, left here last night for Eufaula, I. T., to attend the memorial services of the late Rev. Dr. Buckner, who had been an Indian missionary for thirty years. From there they go to Waco, Ky., to attend the Southern Baptist Convention.

Sunday evening at the Second Church there will be a special "service of thanksgiving." Since the new year came in Dr. Boyd has baptized every Sunday, and a large company have been thus added to the church. In recognition of this wonderful work a special service will be held to-morrow (Sunday) night. There will be special music by the choir, a chorus of young people and the congregation, and an address.

CHRISTIAN.

Next week J. H. Garrison goes to Iowa to attend the State Ministerial Convention to be held there.

J. H. Smart left to-day for a three weeks' tour of the West in the interest of the Christian Publishing Company.

B. W. Johnson will preach at the North St. Louis Church, Eighth and Mound, tomorrow morning. J. H. Garrison at Fourth Church, 4006 Broadway.

Dr. Fred Power, pastor of the Garfield Memorial Church, Washington, D. C., will lecture at Central Church on next Thursday evening, May 10.

Rev. John H. Fay, D. D., pastor Central Church, will preach to-morrow morning on he subject "Righteousness is Blessedness," and in the evening on "Wise Weeping, or the Uses of Trouble."

The State Sunday school evangelist, F. E. Meigs, is in the city visiting the city Sunday schools and conferring with the Sunday School Board concerning his work for the coming year.

To-morrow a collection will be taken up in all the Sunday schools of the Christian Church in this city for the benefit of the Heathen Missionary Society. The churches of the State have promised $10,000 for this fund, and expect a good portion of this amount from St. Louis schools.

EPISCOPAL.

Dr. Fulton's lecture subject for to-morrow evening will be "Confession and Absolution Historically Considered."

Bishop Robertson, after but a few days' stay in the city, having officiated at Ascension Day services, left again last night for visits to various points in his diocese.

At the meeting of the Chapter of St. Louis Episcopal Churches held last Thursday evening, Mr. D. E. Garrison was appointed as a lay proctor from St. George's.

METHODISTS.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society held its regular monthly meeting at Union Church Thursday afternoon.

The Ladies' Aid Society of Union Church has arranged for a strawberry festival to be held in the church some time during the latter part of the present month.

Rev. C. P. Masden will spend his summer vacation at Mountain Lake Park, a new summer resort on the Baltimore and Ohio Railway, 250 miles west of Baltimore.

The new parsonage now building by the Union people will be completed by June 1st, and ready for occupancy by the time of the pastor's return from his summer vacation.

Rev. John E. Morris, M. D., of the St. Louis Conference, stationed at Crystal City, died there very suddenly after but two or three days' illness early in the week. He was interred at Rolla.

A new feature of the pastorate of Rev. C. P. Masden, at Union Church, is a meeting held every Friday evening in the church, and which is devoted to conversation on spiritual matters. It is known as the conversational meeting, and its sessions are proving very interesting and successful.

Bishop Bowman was in the city several days of this week, but returned to Indiana Thursday evening to continue his efforts to raise the subscriptions necessary to secure the De Pauw donation. So far he has been very successful in his solicitations, and predicts that before long the required amount will be raised.

To-morrow will be observed in all the churches of the denomination in the city as city church extension day. Special sermons on the importance and duty of the church extension work will be delivered in all the churches, and special collections for the work in the city will be taken up. Union Church expects to raise at least $1,300, and the other churches will secure corresponding amounts.

METHODIST (SOUTH).

Father Tallon leaves for Europe on Pentecost Sunday. He leaves New York on the steamer Scythia May 16th.

Dr. McAnally has returned from his tour of district conferences of the Southeast and reports all in a most flourishing condition.

Rev. S. G. Wilson, P. E., will hold the quarterly meeting at Centenary Church tomorrow, and will preach both morning and evening. The morning service will include the administration of the sacrament and reception of new members.

The alterations that are being made at Centenary Church are nearly completed and reflect great credit on Aug. Brinke, the architect, for his success in putting a beautiful and modern inside to the church.

CATHOLICS.

Two Sisters of Mercy are at Quarantine nursing the sick.

Father Chambers, S. J., was in the city, this week, on a visit to his mother.

The parishioners of St. Bridget parish will present Father Walsh with a testimonial address, accompanied with a purse, on the occasion of his departure for Europe.

It was announced in the College Church on last Sunday that in future all marriages in that church will take place in the morning and during mass.

A retreat for the Young Ladies' Sodality of St. Lawrence O'Toole's parish will begin on Wednesday, May 9th, and close on Pentecost Sunday. All the ladies of the parish are invited to attend. Father Tallon will conduct the exercises.

Rev. Father Murphy, S. J., the celebrated Irish missionary, now visiting the States, will lecture in the Mercantile Library Hall Sunday evening, May 6, at 8 o'clock on the "Sufferings of Ireland for the Faith in the Past and Present—The Mass—Rocks and Hedge-Schools—also the Right Rev. Bishop of Kilmore." Admission fifty cents.

The following invitation has been sent out, by the Sisters of the Visitation:

MONASTERY VISITATION, ST. LOUIS, May 1, 1883.

REV. AND DEAR FATHER—The fiftieth anniversary of our establishment in the West, falling on Ascension Thursday, we postpone the celebration of our Golden Jubilee to the following Tuesday, the 8th inst., and trust you will be present at the high mass and reception of Miss Lulu Taylor at 9 o'clock. Our limited supply of cassocks and surplices obliges us to request you to furnish your own for the occasion. Thursday, the 10th inst., 3 p. m., the pupils will have a little entertainment, and all hope you will by your presence honor them and

Yours unworthily in Xt.,
SISTERS OF VISITATION, D. S. B.

The Supreme Council of the Catholic Knights of America will meet in University Hall, corner of Ninth street and Washington avenue, on next Tuesday. About sixty-eight delegates will be present, representing thirty-four States. It is expected that Bishop Ryan will be present at the opening of the council. On Wednesday evening a musical and literary entertainment will be given at Mercantile Library Hall, and on Thursday a banquet will be given at the Southern Hotel. Missouri has a larger membership in this order than any other State, and it is expected that one of her delegates will be elected either president or secretary.

On Thursday last at 10:30 o'clock the children of St. Lawrence O'Toole's parish, to the number of two hundred, were confirmed by Bishop Ryan. For two months past the Rector, Father Henry, has been instructing these children every day, and sometimes three times a day. As many of them did not attend the parish school it was necessary to devote much time to their instruction. Father Henry had baptized nearly all of those children and married the parents of most of them, and hence he felt in a tripple sense their father. Before they were admitted to first communion and confirmation he gave them a retreat of three days, that their hearts, as well as their minds, might be ready for the great mysteries into which they were to be initiated. The little ones were banqueted after the high mass on Thursday.

Y. M. C. A.

There will be the usual gospel service for strangers at Y. M. C. A. to-morrow evening at 8 o'clock.

Mr. Walter C. Douglass will conduct a meeting for young men only at the Y. M. C. A., to-morrow, at 4 p. m.

Rev. Dr. Brooks will give the defined reading on "The Table of Shew Bread," in connection with the Tabernacle series, to young men at the Y. M. C. A. on Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock.

Mr. Walter C. Douglass, the secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association, will be ordained at the Grand Avenue Presbyterian Church to-morrow evening. The pastor, Rev. Mr. Hollifield, Rev. Dr. Farris and perhaps Rev. Dr. Martin, of St. Charles, will be present and participate in the ordination services.

The conference of the general secretaries of the United States and Canada will assemble in Racine, Wis., next Saturday evening, the 12th inst. This is the annual gathering of the secretaries to study methods of work and is their principal school of education. Ten years ago there were only a dozen or so secretaries in the country, and now there are 312 young men employed and giving their entire time to this work, while the number is increasing rapidly each year. W. Hind Smith, the secretary of the London, England, Y. M. C. A., will be in attendance.

American Fables.

From the Detroit Free Press.

A Peasant who had often heard that Truth was a Jewel lying at the bottom of a well one day descended into his well to search for the treasure. He skinned his knees and elbows, barked his nose, run an old fork into his foot and shivered around for six long hours before his wife drew him up and asked:

"What in Goodness' name were you doing down there?"

"Looking for Truth."

"Why, I could have told you before you went down that you were the biggest Fool in America."

MORAL:

You can get more Truth than you want around any well-curb.

THE SAILOR AND THE SHARK.

A Sailor who had fallen overboard and was speedily interviewed by a Shark cried out to his enemy:

"Have pity on a man who is down!"

"My friend," replied the Shark, "a man who keeps himself above water is of no use to me. Now is my time!"

MORAL:

The man who falls overboard in business can expect no favors from the Sheriff.

THE FOX AND THE FARMER.

A Fox one day made a call upon a Peasant and bitterly complained of the custom of shutting poultry up nights in Fox-proof pens. "It isn't because I suffer at all," added Reynard, "but think how uncomfortable it must be for the poor Fowls. It is their condition I wish to mitigate."

The Peasant took the matter under advisement, and next evening he neglected to shut up his Fowls. Next morning he came across the Fox just as he had finished feasting on a fat Pullet and cried out: "Ah! this is the way you take to pity my poor Fowls, is it?"

"Well, you see," grinned Reynard, "I feel very sorry for the Fowls, but at the same time cannot afford to miss an opportunity."

MORAL:

The man with ten acres of land to sell is the chap who first sees the need of an orphan asylum.

H. BRAUN, St. Louis, Mo., says: "Brown's Iron Bitters is giving entire satisfaction to my customers."

Tough Sammy.

New York Cor. Philadelphia Times.

After all the better way is to stay alive. Look at Mr. Tilden. He has been dying these many years, but he isn't dead yet. On the contrary he is very live, and if he isn't heard from about the time the next Democratic National Convention meets it will be because the occasion for a statue of Tilden has arrived. I saw in a Western journal yesterday that Mr. Tilden is as lively as a spring chicken. That's nonsense. He is old and infirm and at times feeble, but he is alert and active in mind now and then feels much better than he looks. Mr. Dana has an idea that Mr. Tilden is not thinking ahead Presidentially. That is, "they say" Mr. Dana expressed that idea. Possibly, but gentlemen who are much nearer Mr. Tilden than Mr. Dana is, and who for years have been exponents of the old man's desires and aims, don't agree with Mr. Dana. There are certain journalistic straws which indicate a very pronounced breeze in the Tilden camp, and very likely Mr. Dana, when at home, knows it as well as the others. I wonder if Tilden will ever have a status in the park. He certainly deserves one, if any of 'em do. To be sure, he is building a solid foundation all the time, and in the honors paid him he sees the estimate to be put upon him in the future. Like Salvini, he takes the good things of life as he goes through it.

Kite Time.

From an Exchange.

The boys have just got through breaking windows with their tops, and now comes kite time. Nothing has ever been invented that is superior to a well regulated kite in causing a team to run away and distribute the inmates of the vehicle at irregular intervals along the boulevard. There are several premonitory symptoms announcing the advent of kite time. When the head of the family, on getting up suddenly from a chair, finds a plate of flour paste adhering to his person, that is one of the symptoms. When the spools of thread mysteriously disappear, and nobody knows at meal times where the boys are, those are two more signs that kite time has arrived. The boy who flies kites, like the legislator who tarries long at the wine cup, has redness of eyes from looking up at the sun. Almost every boy flies a kite, and one of the greatest blessings the country derives from the Western Union—in fact the only blessing the country derives from that monopoly—is that about half the kites lodge on the telegraph wires. When a boy has lost his kite he goes about cutting the strings of other boys' kites, which is very much the way politicians treat each other.

"No sense in having sickness if you will use Hop Bitters in time."—One who knows.

An Actor Prospecting.

From the Denver Tribune.

"This is a beautiful city," said Mr. William H. Crane, the comedian, as he alighted from his carriage in front of the hotel yesterday morning.

"Yes," said the driver; "the population is about 60,000, we have the finest Opera-house in the world and our streets are imcomparable."

"Can you tell me," inquired Mr. Crane, "whether in this lovely, refined and progressive city the cultured populace admit of 'straights'?"

"Do you mean 'straights' at poker?" asked the intelligent Jehu.

"I do, most assuredly," replied Mr. Crane.

"Well, really, I don't know," said the driver, "I've been here only a week. But you will find it worth your while to take a drive on Capitolhill, around by the Court-house and out Broadway to the Sans Souci."

"You don't happen to know then," asked Mr. Crane, with some anxiety, "of any nice, quiet little parties who wouldn't mind sitting in a small game after theater of a night? You see, this is my first visit to Denver and I want the engagement to be a particularly successful one.

"I ain't much acquainted," explained the driver, "but I can skin around and find out what you want."

"That's right," said Mr. Crane, tipping the fellow a two-dollar bill; "whenever I get into a new town, I like to inform myself on its customs, ways and peculiarities, and mind you, driver, be sure to find out about the 'straights'—that is a point I desire to be thoroughly posted on at the very start."

"WE HAVE THE DUDE."

Ex-Senator Bruce Discusses the Condition of the Negro.

He Thinks the Race is Rapidly Growing in Wealth and Inteiligence—The Morals of the Colored People—They Have Everything, Including the Dude.

Special Correspondence of the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, May 3.—Walking along F street just in front of the Ebbitt House early this morning your correspondent met ex-Senator Bruce, of Mississippi, Register of the Treasury, one of the most prominent representatives of the colored race. He was leading by the hand a very pretty baby boy, with dark, wavy hair and a clear olive complexion, tastefully dressed and carrying in his hand a tiny lunch basket.

"He is just on his way to the kindergarten," laughed the ex-Senator, as the little toddler reached up to shake hands.

"You are exemplifying your faith in education for the race by an early start for the young man, Mr. Register."

"Yes, it is the great need of our race now," he said, "and I wish that the powers that be could be brought to realize it as keenly as many of our own people do. Do you know that many of the colored people so thoroughly realize the necessity for education that they are willing to deprive themselves of almost anything else that this may be had?"

"A very encouraging symptom, is it not, Mr. Bruce?"

"Very."

"Are you satisfied with the progress that your race has made in the past twenty years?"

"I think the progress which it has made is, everything considered, very remarkable and very ratifying. Indeed, I do not believe the annals of history show such progress by any other race or class of people. Of course there is yet much to accomplish, but I speak of that which has been done and the material with which it was accomplished."

"But the school system of the South—is it adequate to the needs of the race?"

"No, not at all. Why, we have in the old slave States over 3,000,000 colored persons above ten years of age who cannot write," and he moved down the street towards the Treasury Building.

"What is the remedy, then?"

"Oh, the Government. The National Government ought to appropriate a sum of money—say $10,000,000—for school purposes there, in case the States do a certain portion of the work. They plead, you know, that they are not able to keep up public schools for the negro, or even, indeed, for the whites, saying that the war impoverished them to such an extent. And that is doubtless true, for they lost greatly in other property in addition to their slaves. But the colored people are good citizens as a rule, orderly and diligent, and many of them are becoming property-owners and tax-payers, and it is right that they shall have educational advantages. Their position as tax-payers entitles them to it, and the power of the ballot which they hold makes it the duty of the Government to itself, as well as to them, to make them intelligent."

MAKING IT AVAILABLE

"Are the colored people of the South becoming land-owners, then?"

"Yes; many of them own their homes now. The progress in that direction has been slow and painful, but it is on a firm basis now, and will move forward more rapidly. Great difficulty was encountered at first in this regard, very great. The Southern people, who had always looked upon the colored man as property, had serious objections to selling him land. They did not want to break up their big plantations, nor did they want to see the colored man a property-owner, for they realized that he was too valuable as an employe, and if he became a landowner he would work for himself and not for them. Then, too, the colored people had a hard time with the land they did purchase, or attempt to make their own. They had no experience in such matters, and, in many cases, after paying for land they found that the men from whom they bought it, as they supposed, had no title to it. They are learning now, however, to take the necessary steps and to see that they have got good titles. Then the landowners are getting now so that they will sell more readily to them, and they are getting to own a good deal of land through the South. The report of the Comptroller-General of Georgia shows that one acre in fifty of the cultivated lands of that State are owned by colored people, and this, I think, is about a fair average of the situation throughout the South generally."

"The colored people are accumulating considerable wealth, then, are they not?"

"Yes, there are a good many

QUITE WEALTHY MEN

among the colored population now. I don't know of more than one or two who could be counted millionaires, but there are a good many who run up into the hundreds of thousands, and large numbers who are worth, say $25,000. The colored man, as a rule, is great on real estate. Let him get possession of a few feet of ground—a home—and he will never part with it if he can help it. He will almost starve rather than do so. And that is a good spirit, I think. Make a man a tax-payer and owner of the soil, and you make him a good citizen."

"Are they doing much in the trades?"

"No, unfortunately they are not yet able to do so. The trades unions are against them, and will not permit any members of the unions to take them as apprentices. The result is that, while they would be glad to get trades, they cannot get opportunity to learn them. That is a race prejudice which we will have to live down, I suppose. Before the war there were many colored mechanics, for every owner was glad to make his slave more valuable by making him a skilled laborer. But the trades unions are violently opposed to the negro learning a trade of any kind. Why, in the cotton factories of the South no colored people can be employed except to do the heavy work. The skilled laborers who are brought there from the North to do the work only go on the agreement that among them."

"You speak of the intellectual and material progress of the race. From the standpoint of morality, do you think there is much to be said?"

"Yes, quite. The Methodist and Baptist Churches alone have nearly 1,500,000 of colored people, and the amount of church property they own is quite wonderful. The percentage of crime among them is not large, and the marital relation to-day is infinitely more sacred among the colored people, as a class, than it was a few years ago."

"Yes?"

"Yes. And now I have said a good deal about the colored man," said Bruce with a laugh, "but I just want to 'add one more statement which I think will settle the question as to our progress."

"Well?"

"Well, we have the dude, the colored dude, full-fledged and as pronounced as the white race can produce," and his hearty laugh rang out as he climbed the Treasury steps, "we have the dude."

Encounter with Lions.

From the Billings Herald.

In the month of February Isaac Brewington was hunting in the Bull Mountains and upon the edge of a dense thicket he came upon two young but nearly full-grown mountain lions. They began retreating into the brush, but Brewington, losing no time, fired two shots from his Winchester repeater and had the satisfaction of seeing both cubs fall, but apparently not quite dead. He was about to make his way toward them through the brush when the mother of the animals, a monstrous and ferocious-looking brute, bounded toward him from the opposite direction. He retreated and as he stepped back fired a shot which brought her to the ground. She arose almost immediately, again pursued him, and as he backed toward the neighboring bluff he gave the lioness another shot, with the same result as the first. Then a cartridge stuck in his rifle and as he saw the brute try again to rise and noticed the distance still intervening between him and the bluff—his only chance of escape—it looked as if he must become a sacrifice to appease the rage and the appetite of the bereaved mother. But when she got upon her feet she turned and made toward her cubs, and the hunter lost no time in making his way over the bluff and out of that locality.

He said nothing of his adventure, nor did he visit the spot until last week, when, with a party of friends, he reconnoitred the ground and found the bodies of the two young lions almost where they had fallen and that of the dam near by. The latter was an unusually large specimen, with claws measuring three inches in length.

OCCUPATIONS OF ANIMALS.

Dynamite Fiends, Undertakers and Æsthetes—Birds That Keep Hotels.

From the New York Sun.

"There's a curious reflection of human affairs in the action of the lower animals," said the naturalist to the reporter.

"Everything but the dynamite phase," suggested the latter.

"No, I wont accept that," was the reply; "and I'll wager you can't mention a class of men or an occupation followed by them to which I can't show you something similar in the so-called lower animal kingdom."

The reporter suggested the dynamite fiend.

"Well," continued the naturalist, pulling out a drawer upon which was a blood-curdling name, "here's a beetle that belongs to the explosive brotherhood, and so powerful an agent it is that it is called the 'Bombardier,' and is ready to go off at a moment's notice. It is, as you see, an old fashioned sort of a fellow—doesn't affect long hair and the like; but let an enemy follow it too closely and it stops suddenly, and if you were listening you would hear a report, a puff of smoke would rise in the air, and the pursuer would be completely demoralized.

"I have seen these bombardiers fire five or six times in as many minutes, whirling about as if taking aim. The explosives come from a gland. Quite a number of animals carry explosives. The larvæ of some dragon flies eject a liquid irritating to man. The squids, however, lead in this respect. I remember drifting along over the reef at Nassau several years ago, and seeing several squids just below the surface, I put out my hand, and in a second my dearest friend wouldn't have known me. I was literally drenched with ink, which was thrown from a distance of at least three feet. It was indelible, and I still have the vouchers in the way of stained linen."

Here the naturalist took down a drawer labelled "Myrmeleon," and said: "Here is not only a plotter, but a diagram of its trap. The propensity seems bred in the bone, as it is indulged in by the young insects. When first hatched the insect seeks out a soft spot on some miniature sandy plain. It generally holds its head in place at one point, while its body is whirled around like a pair of dividers. This done, the insect begins throwing out the sand; some is carried, but the greater part is removed on a plan that at least shows an attempt at labor saving. With a quick movement the worker shovels a load upon its head, and by a backward upward jerk it hurls it far out of the excavation. If a pebble or stone is met with it is tossed out in the same way, masses half as large as the worker being hurled over a foot away. When a large stone is encountered the intelligence displayed is remarkable. The engineer seems to know that the rock can't be tossed, and so he carefully rolls it upon his head and proceeds to climb up the incline of the pit. Naturally the stone would roll down at any incline, but to avert this the insect lifts its tail high in air, and so crawls up the side of the stone on a perfect level. I have seen them try a stone ten or fifteen times, and then give it up and select another location. After the pit is completed in represents the cast on inverted cone, and at the bottom the insect conceals itself, leaving only its two enormous jaws protruding. You see here on this diagram the whole tragedy is enacted. We will suppose that this ant is the Czar on the way to coronation. He rushes along, comes to the pit with his attendants, steps on the prepared slides, and goes trolling down into the mouth of the living or Nihilist trap below. Perhaps when half way down the ant regains a foothold, and seems in a fair way to escape, but the trap-maker throws off all concealment, quickly shovels sand upon its head, and hurls load after load at the victim, who rolls down helpless into his enemy's jaws, and is killed. When the trap-maker has sucked the blood, he unceremoniously hoists the remains upon his head and throws them out upon the sand. The pit is then repaired for the next victim.

"Among the animal workers all occupations are found. Take a colony of bees, for instance. In forming a nest one set of bees are ordinary laborers, and form the rough cells. A set of skilled laborers then take hold and shape the cells, and so on. Among the ants the workers not only have their share of work to do, but they differ from the others in shape and general appearance, the kings, queens, soldiers and laborers being all markedly different in appearance. The soldiers have enormous jaws, but never work. They rush out fiercely when you break into a nest. If the enemy is not visible they return, and the laborers come out and begin repairs. The army ants of South America show great intelligence. The workers, like our sappers and miners, often go ahead and form a protective arch, under which the soldiers march; and so rapidly is this thrown up that the onward march is not delayed. The ants are also slave-owners. They capture ants of other species and force them to work for them and attend them as body servants. So luxurious do some of these slave-owners become that they are utterly helpless when deprived of their menials. The latter not only wait on their masters, but feed them. If the slaves are taken away their owners perish.

"Ants are also farmers. In Texas a tribe collect the seeds of various plants and plant them in close proximity to their homes, so that they can benefit by the seed. The farmer or grain ants of Europe store up vast supplies in underground granaries. After a damp season the seeds are taken out and laid in the sun and finally returned."

"How is it the seeds don't sprout?" asked the reporter.

"That's the most wonderful part of it. The seeds don't sprout, though there they are planted under ground and kept fresh. It is supposed that the ants bite the seed in some way so that they are in a state of coma, just as wasps sting animals so that they remain insensible for months. Ants may be said also to keep cows—not exactly Durhams, but insects that answer the same purpose. They collect the plant lice, and, by caressing them in some way, force or induce them to give out or exude a drop of sweet liquor. I have seen five or six ants awaiting their turn to milk one of these cows. The ants often collect the eggs of the aphides, place them on plants near their homes, and care for them in many ways, just as we do for our blooded stock. In the fall ants have been known to take their cows under ground and try to keep them through the winter. Many ants keep beetles and other insects as pets, some as playfellows, others on account of their odor. Several hundred distinct species of insects are in this way kept prisoners under ground.

"In engineering the ants are equally skilful. They bridge wide rivers by joining together their bodies, clinging one to another, and thus forming a long string that the wind blows across the stream. In this way a bridge is formed over which an entire army passes."

"James, James," cried a shrill voice from another room.

"That's my mother-in-law," whispered the naturalist, confidentially; "she's the one exception. There isn't her prototype in the entire animal kingdom."

"James, if you think I'm going to allow my daughter's piano cover to be used to cultivate moths on, you're mistaken." A florid-faced, much excited lady here burst into the room, and, upon seeing the reporter, withdrew as if jerked from behind.

"It's impossible," said the imperturbable man of science, "to impress woman with the fact that it's ever necessary to make any sacrifice in the cause of science. I've been cultivating these moth cocoons all winter in hopes of a glorious harvest this spring, but there they go at one fell swoop. They afford an example of what you might call æsthetic feelings among the lower animals. That piano cover was of mixed colors, and between you and me, I placed the worms there last fall merely to see if they showed any preference for color, and they certainly did. Over half selected red threads in making their winter nests, and all were evidently in favor of decoration, as they selected the brightest colors, the worms seemingly going out of their way to select them.

"Here is the tube of a marine worm. You see it was first formed of finely ground pieces of sand—in fact, of anything that the animal could get hold of—just as the inner walling of a house is made of rough material; but when it comes to the exterior there is a chance for decoration. As the builder uses finer woods for the outside, so the worm has applied all these delicate shells so that the tube seems made up of them. Here is another shell called the Phorus, found in Japanese waters. It affects large bivalve shells and in some way sticks them about its shell. Now, if the animal had no taste, the first old shell or stone that came along would be used; but, as you see, nothing but these shells are used. Here's another and a fossil, showing that shells did the same thing millions of years ago.

"Many birds have the decorative instinct. Certain ones in Africa are said to fasten fire-flies to their nests that gleam at night like so many diamonds. Another African bird bites off all its tail feathers except the tip of the longest pinions, and thus gives itself a jaunty air. The hornbills color their feathers artificially, from certain glands. A family of birds found in Australia and allied to the birds of paradise, brings shells and other objects miles from the sea to decorate their play-houses with them. Some fancy curious bones, others shells and some prefer fresh flowers.

"Now, as to builders. The architectural ability of birds almost equals that of man. Some nests, like those of a West Indian blackbird, are hotels and are built by several birds, who sit on any or all of the eggs, as it happens. Then there are flats built by the tailor birds, where the residences are side by side and protected by a perfect roof. Among the other workers is the carpenter bee, that bores a hole as perfect as the finest instrument of human make, and forms a partition of the sawdust. Here is a worker in metal. It bored these holes in this piece of lead, but no one knows how. Here is a piece of the hardest granite known, yet it has been rumed by this shell, a pholas. Stranger yet, the miner has a lamp to work by, a phosphorescent light.

"Among the animals that are in the submarine diving business is the spider. It has no diving bell or armor, yet it goes below the surface and remains there by taking down air beneath its body in the shape of balls, which it leaves there beneath some twig or leaf.'

"How about reporters?"

"Animal reporters are scarce," was the reply; "but if you have ever hunted the black bear you must have noticed the curious markings and scratches it makes at a distance seven or eight feet from the ground. These signs rank as high as the tramp sign language; one bear knows that another has been there before. The sailors are represented by this spider, that not only goes to sea, but builds its own boat of leaves and pushes off in search of prey. The dramatic profession is represented by some South American birds, who go to Europe to certain strange performances for the benefit of other companions. As for the undertakers, many species of beetle bury their dead. The medical profession is represented by the doctor fish, who has in his side a lancet, which comes out without warning, and which, like that of Bob Sawyer, is always ready for use. The wasps are the paper makers; some are masons. The ministers are represented by the praying mantes."

Canceled or Absorbed.

From the Wall Street News.

When there was a show for a railroad to a certain village in Michigan the citizens of the town came forward as they were able and subscribed for stock, and the road was finally built. A year or so after, when the man who had worked up the boom was settled in a fat position and figured prominently in railroad reports, a subscriber called upon him and said:

"Mr. Blank, I subscribed for $100 worth of stock in the G. R. X. road."

"Yes."

"That made me a stockholder?"

"I did."

"But I have never been notified of any meetings, and I understand that my stock has no value."

"Well, you see, we had to mortgage the road for the iron."

"Yes."

"Then we changed the name."

"Yes."

"Then we pooled with the B. & W. road.

"Yes.'

"Then we voted to extend to the present terminus."

"Yes."

"Well, just where the vote was which canceled your stock or absorbed it I cannot remember, but if you are laboring under the delusion that you have any financial interest in our road the president will request the vice-president to instruct the auditor to order the secretary to consult the minutes of the various meetings and try and discover which hole the common stock went into when the preferred was pulled out by the tail."

Cattle Kings of Texas.

From the Atlanta Constitution.

Henry R. Harris, Jr., lately back from a trip to TEXAS, where he has some extensive landed interests, told me how he found things in the Lone Star State. He said: "I saw in Fort Worth an old fellow that didn't look as if he had a dollar that was one of the cattle kings of Texas. He had lately sold his herds to a company of capitalists for $1,650,000. They had not yet made the payment and were already offered $2,000,000 for the same herds by a London company. He did not own an acre of land, but simply sold his cattle-mark. The tendency is for outside capital to control the business. I rode over with a Mobile capitalist who was carrying $200,000, with which he was going to set his son up in cattle. He estimated that the money—that is, the herds—would double every three years, and that is about the estimate of the best cattle men of Texas.

A BOGUS HUSBAND.

How a Wife Was Imposed on by a Stranger for Years.

Strange Methods of Administering Justice in the Sixteenth Century.

Written from the French for the Post-Dispatch.

In the unity of creation, so infinite is its variety that Leibnitz was led to remark that no two leaves were exactly alike.

If there is such diversity then, in simple structures, how much greater must exist in the complex organization of the human frame. Even were there a perfect resemblance in physical traits, the character and intellect under the influences of education and the thousand circumstances that control mental development must vary in different persons to such an extent as would seem to preclude the possibility of any case of mistaken identity wherever there are afforded due opportunities of observation. Yet in the history of nearly every nation we read of bold impostors, who for a time have succeeded in deceiving even those who were best qualified to detect the fraud.

Persia, Macedonia, the Romans, the Eastern and Western Empires, France, England, Flanders, Portugal, Russia, China and Brandenbourg have in turn beheld a large portion of their population, attracted to the support of some ambitious pretender, assisted in his schemes by a fortuitous resemblance to a popular favorite, great talents for deception, and, above all, by that remarkable quality of the human mind which leads the masses to eagerly embrace whatsoever is novel and surprising. What Tacitus said of the Greeks seduced by a false Drusus, is equally true of mankind at large. "Alliciebantur ignari fama nominis promptis animis ad nova et mira fingebant simul credebantque." "Attracted by the gleam of whatever is mysterious, with minds prone to the new and wonderful, they believe in the figments of their own imagination."

How far a credulous people may be played upon is instanced by the success of Gregory Otrepief, who ascended the throne of Russia and reigned nearly a year. Representing himself as Demetrius, the son of the Czar Ivan, a youth who was assassinated when eight years of age, he imposed upon a whole people and even obtained a recognition from the mother of the true Prince. Perkin Warbeck, the counterfeit Duke of York, and Lambert Simnel, the personator of the Earl of Warwick in the reign of Henry VII., will be remembered by readers of English history. When political interests are involved, a deception of this kind is readily effected. Those who are discontented with the reigning power lend themselves without too curious an inquiry to whomsoever will best serve their seditious purposes. When there is question, however, of the identity of a private person, where is invoked the machinery of a court of justice with all its power of disentangling the truth from circumstances, however confusing, it would seem that the issue could not be long in doubt, and the detection of the impostor would be swift and certain. But the recent case of the claimant of the personality and the estate of Sir Robert Tichborne demonstrates how readily an audacious impostor may avail himself of public credulity to the, baffling almost of the tribunals of justice.

Perhaps the most remarkable instance of successful imposture and its final detection occurred in France and may be found fully reported in the criminal annals of the sixteenth century. In our account of this interesting trial we shall closely follow the original report, that the reader may obtain some idea of the procedure of courts of justice at that time. In A. D. 1539, Martin Guerre, a native of Biscay, when only eleven years of age, was married to Bertrande de Rols, of about the same age, in the town of Artignes, where they continued to reside. Of a condition somewhat above that of the simple peasantry, they enjoyed a modest competence, and their happiness would have been complete had their union been blessed with its usual fruits. During ten years the marriage was not consummated, owing, perhaps, to the youth of the husband, though, in accordance with the superstitious sentiments of the age, his defect was credited to the influence of magic arts. Notwithstanding the instances of her parents to seek an annulment of the marriage, Bertrande remained faithful to her spouse, and her love and patience finally were rewarded by the removal of the only cause of their discontent, by the birth of a son, who received the name of Sauxi. Her happiness, however, was but brief. Martin Guerre, shortly after his boy was born, guilty of a petty theft from his father and dreading his resentment, yielding, also, perhaps, to the roving disposition common to youth, abandoned his home and family, and for eight years nothing was heard of him. During her enforced widowhood Bertrande's conduct was a model to forsaken wives and preserved her character from the slanders that circulate so freely among village gossips.

Her constancy was at last rewarded, as she believed, by the return of her wandering husband. One day there appeared in the village a discharged soldier, Arnaud du Tilh, who, in his native village of Spain, bore the sobriquet of Pansette. His form and features presenting an exact counterpart of the missing Martin Guerre, and his intimate knowledge of all the circumstances of the latter's former life, even of those secret passages which rarely transpire beyond the narrow circle of family and conjugal life, obtained for him a ready recognition as the real Martin Guerre.

The four sisters of the wanderer, his uncle, Pierre, his wife's relations, the faithful Bertrande herself, all alike deceived, extended to him an enthusiastic welcome and without suspicion installed him in the place of the absent Martin Guerre.

For three years the deception continued. Jupiter in the role of Amphitryon was not more expert in his part, nor was Bertrande less credulous than Alcmena. Arnaud du Tilh, without question, enjoyed the property of Martin Guerre both in Artignes and Biscay, whilst Bertrande bore to him two children. A sceptic, mindful of the adage, "Les absents ont toujours tort," may doubt the good faith of Bertrande in such extraordinary circumstances. However this may be, Pierre Guerre first had his suspicions aroused, and he opened the eyes of the injured wife. She accordingly instituted legal proceedings against Arnaud du Tilh, and demanded of the court that he be compelled to "demand pardon of God, the King and herself, with bare head and feet and stripped to his shirt, with a lighted torch in his hands, for that falsely, audaciously and traitorously he had abused her by taking the name and assuming the person of Martin Guerre."

At the first trial of the case, Arnaud du Tilh displayed a boldness and self-possession which never failed him. In his defense he related the history of his absence, stating that he had enlisted in the army and had served the King for seven or eight years, that then he had taken service with the King of Spain and that after some months, desirous of seeing again his wife and child, he had returned to Artignes, where all his family recognized him, including Pierre Guerre, his uncle, who now persecuted him. The enmity of the latter, he said, was due to a demand made upon him for an account of the proceeds of his property, which, during his absence, he had managed. He asserted that had he been willing to sacrifice his pecuniary interests to his uncle, he would not now be accused of imposture and compelled to defend his own identity. His uncle's anger was so great that once he had attacked and felled him with an iron bar, and he would have lost his life had not Bertrande thrown herself as a shield between himself and his uncle's blows. He claimed that the facile disposition of his wife had been abused by his uncle, in conjunction with his sons-in-law, and demanded to be confronted with her, as he was sure she would not conceal the truth if she were removed from the influence of his enemies.

On interrogation by the Judge he answered with perfect correctness all questions concerning Biscay, the place of birth of Martin Guerre, the father, mother, brothers, sisters and other relations of the same, the year, month and day of his marriage, his wife's parents, the wedding guests and their dress, the officiating priest and the names of those who, according to custom, visited at midnight the nuptial couch. He gave a full detailed account of his travels and adventures and cited the names of those who would corroborate his statements. Questioned separately, Bertrande and himself both gave the same account of the charm which prevented the fecundity of their marriage and the means by which it was overcome.

The depositions of one hundred and fifty witnesses were taken. Thirty or forty testified that he was the real Martin Guerre; that they had been companions of his youth, and that he bore the marks and scars which they remembered. A still larger number swore that from the cradle they had known him as Arnaud du Tilh, nicknamed Pansette. Sixty or more witnesses declared that there was so striking a resemblance between Martin Guerre and Arnaud du Tilh that they were unable to fix the identity of the defendant. It is worthy of notice that the court ordered a report to be made on the resemblance of Sauxi, the son of Martin Guerre, to the sisters of the latter and to the defendant respectively. The result of their inquiry declared a likeness to the sisters, but none to the accused.

On this testimony Arnaud du Tilh was condemned to lose his head, to be followed by the quartering of his body. Such a decision, whilst justified by subsequent events, was certainly not so by the evidence before the Judge. Where the testimony was so conflicting, the doctrine of presumption of innocence where there was reasonable doubt should have prevailed in favor of the accused.

On an appeal taken to the Court of Toulouse, that tribunal, not satisfied with the thoroughness of the preceding investigation, determined to reopen the whole case.

The result of this new trial may be thus summed up. Against the defendant appeared forty-five witnesses who deposed that from infancy they had been intimately acquainted with both Arnaud du Tilh and Martin Guerre, and that the defendant was certainly Arnaud du Tilh. The witness whose testimony bore the most strongly against the accused was his maternal uncle, Carbon Barreau, who was greatly affected at the deplorable situation to which crime had brought his nephew, as well as the part which he was compelled to take in his destruction. It was agreed by these witnesses that Martin Guerre was taller and of darker complexion than the defendant, thin in body and legs, slightly crook-backed, had the chin indented in the middle and pointed, a large and flat nose, a hanging lower lip, the scar of an old ulcer on the face and a scar on the right eyebrow. Arnaud du Tilh, on the other hand, was small and squat, stout in body and leg, was neither crooked nor flat-nosed; otherwise the features and scars were alike in both. According to Martin Guerre's shoemaker he wore number twelves, whilst the accused wore number nines. Martin was skilled in fence and wrestling; defendant was ignorant of both. An inn-keeper testified that the defendant had admitted his imposture, and entreated him not to betray him; another, that when the accused saw that he was recognized by him he made him a sign of secrecy and silence; a third that defendant gave him two handkerchiefs to be delivered to his brother, Jean du Tilh. This testimony was objected to as being based on hearsay, but the court held it to be competent as being evidence of admissions made by defendant. Two witnesses related that a soldier who passed through Artignes was surprised that the accused pretended to be Martin Guerre and stated that the real Martin had lost a leg in battle. The want of resemblance between Sauxi, the child, and the defendant was again urged.

Other witnesses proved the bad character of Arnaud du Tilh and declared him a thief, blasphemer and profane infidel, capable of any crime.

The defense, on the other hand, was fortified by the following testimony:

Four sisters of Martin Guerre, as also his two brothers-in-law, identified the accused as their brother.

Many who were at the wedding testified to the same effect. They adduced as reasons for their belief that the accused was marked like Martin Guerre, in that he had an extravasation of blood in the left eye, the nail of a first finger destroyed, three warts on the right hand and one on the left.

There was also evidence tending to show a conspiracy on the part of Pierre Guerre and his sons-in-law to ruin the accused, and it was currently reported that their prosecution of him was against the wishes of his wife. Moreover Pierre Guerre had frequently said that the accused was his nephew Martin. Nearly all affirmed that on his arrival at Artignes he recognized and called by their names the friends of Martin Guerre, and recalled to their memory many events of former years. The most secret relations between Bertrande and her husband were known to him. She admitted that immediately on his return he asked for a certain pair of trousers and pointed out to her the trunk in which they were found, though she did not know they were there. It was strongly urged that no one but the real man himself could have so intimate a knowledge of the history of Martin Guerre. Moreover it was apparent to the court that the resemblance of the accused to the sisters of Martin was most perfect. When confronted with the accused before the Judge who first tried the case Bertrande had refused to swear against him. Was not this strongly in his favor? She had frequently declared that he was either Martin Guerre or the devil, and had complained that Pierre Guerre and his wife, who was her mother, had threatened to drive her from their house if she would not deny her husband, but up to the last moment, the very day before the proceedings were instituted, she had resolutely adhered to him and had accorded to him all the privileges of the married state.

It was insisted that in a doubtful case under the civil law the decision should be in favor of the marriage and the legitimacy of the offspring; in such a case the presumption of innocence should also prevail.

It was maintained also that the affirmative testimony in favor of the accused should preponderate over the negative brought against him. The rule of law was advanced that two witnesses who affirm are worth a thousand who make a general denial. As to the alleged difference of size it was not strange that Martin Guerre should have become stouter and consequently should appear shorter. The bad character of Arnaud du Tilh was rather in favor of the defendant, as his conduct while living with Bertrande had been uniformly good.

In reply the prosecution set up: That the evidence was not negative, but affirmative, inasmuch as it showed positively that the accused was Arnaud du Tilh. The rule, therefore, did not apply. With regard to the marks and scars, the witnesses were not in accord as to all the marks, but each mark was proved by a separate witness. The rule of law was, however, that two witnesses at least were required to prove any fact. The fact of resemblance, however striking, was not conclusive of identity. Did not Pliny recount that when Sura went as Proconsul to Sicily he met there a poor fisherman who was his exact facsimile. Sura remarking to him that he could not account for this, as his father had never been in Sicily. The fisherman replied: "Do not let that trouble you; my mother has been several times in Rome." Moreover, was there not a perfect resemblance between Pompey and his cook, Menogenes? The knowledge the accused displayed of the friends and circumstances of Martin's past life might be easily accounted for as the result of long and careful preparation and a ready wit. It was probably true, also, as was generally believed, that the defendant was aided in his deception by the use of magic arts.

It was not surprising that Bertrande, when confronted with him, should have refused to swear against him. Through fear of the responsibility which they may incur many are reluctant to swear to facts of which they are convinced. Bertrande's hesitancy in such a manner might be readily explained by her timid disposition, incapable of a violent resolution and reluctant to destroy one whom for so long a time she had regarded as another self. As an oath in criminal matters is not proof positive, so its refusal cannot be such.

Where the testimony was so conflicting, now revealing, now obscuring the truth, the cause of the accused would doubtless have prevailed, the report informs us, as favoring marriage and the rights of the children. The knot of the intrigue was certainly tied almost beyond the possibility of unraveling. The situation was doubtless worthy of divine interference, and it seemed, indeed, but little less than a miracle when, at this critical juncture, the real Martin Guerre put in an appearance on the scene, "like a god out of a machine," to borrow from our classical reporter a comparison.

He came, he said, from Spain, and, as the soldier had reported, he had a wooden leg in place of the one he had lost in the service of Spain.

He promptly filed a request with the court to be examined.

It was accordingly ordered that he be arrested, for fear, perhaps, that he might disappear again, and confronted with the defendant, Berthrande, his sisters and the principal witnesses for the impostor.

When questioned in detail upon the same points to which Arnand du Tilh had returned satisfactory answers, his replies were in the main correct, but not so accurate, detailed or certain as those given by the impostor. When confronted with him, Arnand du Tilch, perfectly unabashed, denounced him as a cheat and a scoundrel, suborned by Pierre Guerre, and declared that he would willingly submit to death if he should fail to cover his enemies with confusion. Thereupon he questioned Martin Guerre in relation to certain facts that should have been known to him.

His answers were not given with the confidence and assurance which distinguished Arnand. The commissioners then examined him in private as to certain secret particulars suggested by Bertrande, and satisfactory responses were received. But Arnaud replied to the same queries with equal exactness. The court then ordered the four sisters of Martin, his two brothers-in-law, Arnaud du Tilh's brothers, and the principal witnesses who maintained that the latter was Martin Guerre, to be brought into the presence of the new arrival. All appeared but the brothers of Arnaud, and the court decided it an act of inhumanity to compel them to testify against a brother's life, but their refusal to appear was taken as evidence against him. The eldest sister was first introduced. Gazing on Martin for a moment, she threw herself into his arms and mingled her tears with his. "This," she exclaimed, "is my brother. I admit the mistake into which I was led by that abominable traitor." The other sisters and all the witnesses were unanimous in confessing their error.

The sympathetic reporter of the case proceeds to tell us that Bertrande, all in tears, "trembling like a leaf agitated by the wind," sought to embrace her injured husband. She implored his pardon for allowing herself to be seduced and deceived by the artifices and impostures of a miserable wretch. In a plea suggested by nature, the enemy of art, she sought to justify herself. She had been swayed at first, she said, by the recognition of his too credulous sisters; her passionate love for him and her ardent desire for his return had contributed to deceive her, the intimate knowlege displayed by the traitor of circumstances, that could only be known to her true husband had completed her ruin. When her eyes were at last opened to the shameful truth, she had wished to bury the horror of her crime in the horror of death, but fear of the divine anger withheld her from self-murder. Honor and her chaste reputation both lost, she had looked only for vengeance, nor had she stayed until the impostor was pursued to conviction and sentence of death. The pathos and charms of Bertrande, we are told, lent an additional eloquence to her words, but all were alike lost on the natural indignation of Martin Guerre. Coldly and severely he rejected her appeal, telling her that father, mother, sisters, friends, all might be deceived, but a wife never, unless the error had some attractions for her. In vain the Commissioners sought to convince the inflexible Martin of his wife's innocence. The last we hear of him he is still implacable and the tender-hearted reporter leaves him with the reflection that time alone could assuage his severity and mitigate his harsh sentiments. When the truth was thus, at last, made evident, the court proceeded to find Arnaud du Tilh guilty of seven grave offenses, viz.: falsification of name, supposition of person (i. e. imposture), adultery, rape, sacrilege, larceny and plagiat or abduction. He was condemned accordingly "to make an amende honorable in front of the church of Artignes, and there, on his knees, stripped to his shirt, with bare head and feet, the hangman's cord about his neck and holding in his hands a burning torch, to ask pardon of God, the King and Justice, of Martin Guerre and Bertrande de Rols, man and wife, and this being done, to be delivered into the hands of the executioner and by him to be led through the streets and markets of Artignes, and with the rope about his neck to be led before the house of Martin Guerre, and there, upon a jibbet to be erected for that purpose, to be hung and strangled." It was further commanded that his body be then and there burnt.

One of the most difficult questions, we are told before the court, was the degree of culpability of Martin Guerre and his wife. Martin Guerre, by abandoning his wife, was the cause of all the disorder and mischief that ensued, but his greatest crime was having fought against the King in the service of Spain.

The court, however, considered that his conduct was due rather to levity than malice, that if he were the cause of his wife's crime or misfortune, he was so too remotely to be amenable to a human tribunal. His treason, it was also thought, was sufficiently punished by the loss of a leg. The case of Bertrande seemed to present a greater degree of culpability; it was hard to conceive that she should have fallen a victim to an impostor, unless she had lent herself to the deception. Even were nature to make the most exact copy, would not certain differences still exist, imperceptible it might be to every one else, but surely not so to a wife? However, her good character, the infernal artifice by which she had been imposed upon, her natural fear of dishonoring herself and of failure should she bring an accusation where she was not certain of her error; these considerations, together with the humane presumption of innocence where guilt was not clearly shown, induced the court to grant her discharge.

In conclusion it is satisfactory to know that Arnaud du Tilh, before execution, made a full confession. On his return from the camp in Picardy, where he had been with Martin Guerre, he was mistaken for the latter by some of his intimate friends. From the information he got from these, together with his acquaintance with Martin Guerre, he was enabled to lay the foundation of his imposture; his ready wit sufficed for the rest, in connection with the easy credulity of his victims. He strenuously denied any recourse to the magical arts of which he was suspected. We regret to state that the learned councillor, M. de Coras, from whose notes this account is abridged, during St. Bartholomew's Massacre was hung in his red robes of office, together with four members of the court which tried this case, in front of the door of the Court-house of Toulouse, A. D. 1572.

THE EXCHANGE PRESIDENTS.

Gossipy Chat About Their Peculiarities and Their Administrations.

In the photographic array of Exchange presidents that is kept in Secretary Morgan's office there are twenty-one represented. There should be twenty-two, but, for a reason given below, the latest honored member of the floor is not shown in the presidential gallery. The gentlemen who have been selected to preside over the Exchange from year to year must have been sound in health and remarkable for longevity. Of the twenty-one only five have died since their induction into their high office. These were H. J. More, John J. Roe, Barton Able, Geo. P. Plant and Wm. J. Lewis, and nearly all the presidents are of a venerable appearance, if gray hairs make them so. Exceptions are to be found in E. O. Stanard, D. P. Rowland, Geo. Bain, John Wahl, Alex H. Smith and Chas. E. Slayback, who still wear their locks threaded with but a few silver hairs. E. O. Stanard, who served through 1866, presents quite a youthful appearance in his picture, and is a decided contrast to the dignified and rather massive gentleman of to-day. But it would be difficult to believe that Gov. Stanard was ever very young and indulged in youthful sports, to see him now. The most aged looking of all the presidents in the gallery, is H. J. More, the first head of the Exchange, though John Scudder, with his snow-white hair and whiskers, has a rather venerable appearance; but his dark, piercing eye, even to be seen in his counterfeit presentment, and his fresh and youthful, thought colorless face, tones down the look of age derived from his "frosty poll." Following along the line of faces a stranger would run across one that at first glance he would take for Gen. Sherman. It is the picture of an old soldier, one who served his country through the Mexican war, and one, too, who, once honored by his fellow members by the highest office in their gift, still holds a firm grip upon their esteem and honor. This is Michael McEnnis.

THERE is no photograph of the president of 1883 in the collection, and from what I can learn there is liable not to be one until the term of office of the present incumbent has expired. After all, it appears to be a good precedent he has set in this, and one, perhaps, that might be followed by his successors to good advantage. I asked John Scholten, who has photographed all the presidents whose pictures appear in the gallery, why he had not been able to present the Exchange with Mr. Ewald's picture. "Well, I'll tell you," said Scholten. "You see Jake's so blamed modest he don't want to have his picture hung up with the balance. I've been after him, time and again, to come around to my gallery, but he tells me to wait. Said he to me the other day, 'Wait until I've finished my term of office, John. Then, if I have been a success as a president, the members will be glad to receive my picture; if I have not—well, I'll see about it.'" President Ewald's dislike to see himself pictured for the public gaze is well known and is really honest on his part. Imagine, then, his horror when he learned shortly after his election that the Spectator intended to present his picture to its subscribers among the series of St. Louis celebrities it was running at that time. "Not by a mill site," remarked the president, and he went down post-haste to the office of that paper to put his veto on the matter. Whether the eloquence of John Reavis was too much for him and he was flattered into believing his picture was a great necessity to the public at large, or whether he was touched by an argument that the cut had been paid for and would be a dead loss to the paper, not to speak of a wasted "Town Talk" notice, at any rate the picture appeared. That it did not flatter President Ewald may be judged by his remarks as he mournfully gazed upon the wretched-looking man presented as his likeness. "I had intended," said he, "to buy up every copy of the Spectator that had my picture in if they refused to keep it out. I'm awful sorry I didn't buy 'em up—and burn them."

Now, President Ewald is really what is called a fine-looking man. Take him when he is freshly-shaved, his silk hat of office on and a flower blossoming in his button-hole he would easily pass muster in a crowd and most probably be picked out as a good-looking gentleman. He is not exactly an Apollo Belvidere. A forty-two-inch waist detracts somewhat from an otherwise symmetrical enough figure, though it adds immensely to his dignity and the position he now occupies. A full face, but slightly creased with the lines that tell of approaching age—he is not yet forty—and business worries, and which lights up well when he smiles, which he frequently does, as he has a pleasant smile and knows it becomes him; a keen gray eye, rather small but knowing; a shapely nose and—a mustache. This mustache should be described in detail, for it really is the crowning glory of his countenance; but suffice it to say, that it is one of the long, drooping kind, not silky, but inclined to curl inward and upward at the end. President Ewald can hardly be called a self-controlled man, though he has exercised a denial and control over himself since his election that is highly commendable. His disposition is generous and usually amiable, but he has a temper of his own. He is blessed with a good nerve, too, and has run counter to several big combinations that have been formed here and elsewhere to control the grain markets. He was along with John Kauffman, when, over two years ago, they found themselves heavily short February wheat, and found, also, that a combination composed of Kehlor, Samuel, Francis, Ben. Lewis and other big guns here had that option cornered. Ewald and Kauffman did not wait until the last of the month and then lay down on their contracts and squeal. They couldn't get the wheat here or in the West to fill their contracts, so they went East to Toledo, Indianapolis, and other points, bought all the No. 2 wheat they could find, brought it here and broke the corner. They lost a good many thousand dollars in this operation, but they filled their contracts, which is more than a great many shorts have done in a "corner."

UP to within the past five or six years the duties of an Exchange president were by no means onerous, and at the meetings of the Board of Directors they seldom were met with more than the routine business necessary to carry along the Exchange in the right track. D. P. Rowland's administration was notable for the fact that in that year (1865) the Exchange moved to its present commodious quarters. In the following year the Freight Bureau was established, which freight bureau, by the way, was knocked in the head by his successor, Geo. Bain. Following Bain came John Wahl, with his famous reign wherein retrenchment and reform was the motto of the Exchange, though at Signor Zamacona's receptions retrenchment and reform received the go-bye and was unheeded during the Signor's visit. Alex. Smith's year was famous for its excursions to different points, St. Joe, Kansas City, Marshfield and other places. Michael McEnnis had the honor of inaugurating the River Improvement Convention and also of working up the scheme for the transferring of members. This latter resulted in an immense addition to the role of membership and the placing of a $300,000 reserve fund to the Exchange's credit. During the next year, when Chas. E. Slayback presided, there were no very eventful events transpired. J. C. Ewald has, however, had his hands full. He and his board have had to fight threatened State grain inspection, both at Jefferson City and Springfield, Ill., and chiefly through the president's efforts State inspection was averted in our own state and staved off, at least temporarily, in East St. Louis. The Board of Registration, which has already done incalculable good to the grain trade of this city, in the matter of short weights, has been put in excellent working order under President Ewald's direction. Several other important enterprises are on the cards and yet to be shaped into form by this year's board, and the outlook is that 1883 will be one of the most memorable years in the history of the Exchange.

Women in the Fields.

From Longman's Magazine.

The gangs of rustic women working in the fields like so many Ruths and Amazons, though to be found in the country between Northumberland and Ayr, are peculiarly characteristic of the Lothians, and they add a quaint color to the landscape, with their large shades or "uglies" projecting from their circular straw hats, which have been covered by their own hands with pieces of print, usually of a delicate color, such as pale yellow, pale pink or pale blue. The name "ugly" was no doubt given by a townsman in contempt, but the headdress, which the fashionable coal-scuttle hat resembles, is very picturesque with lovely brown faces, and throws out the deep, heavy eyes which open-air life gives to all. Their short kilted petticoats are gray and weather-stained, and the shawls about their strong shoulders are the strongest colored article they wear. It may be that no woman enjoys the open-air work, but for the stirring, high-tilled farms here women workers are necessary; and sometimes they feed the cattle and clean the large-stalled stables. The majority are in their teens or beyond thirty. All country women cannot be domestic servants or seamstresses, but an old hind herding with a gun will tell you that for a woman to work afield is her last resource, and that a lass with any spirit would not do it. A field of men and women, children of the plough, huge folk "bloused with health and wind and rain and labor," working together on the red fen land, tells you how strong is the hold the farms and farm work here have on the family life, and the high cultivation shows the necessity for woman labor on this high-rented land. It is a most ancient sight, a fine grouped scene, which for easy rustic movements, sweet open-air beauty and freshness, and the tender tints of strong field clothes, can hardly be surpassed. Women have wrought on the fields since the flood; women will work till the end of the chapter as long as seed has to be sown, turnips have to be thinned and hoed, hay made, grain reaped, potatoes lifted, the land cleaned and "wrack" gathered, and there are not men and boys enough in the parish for the work. It is at the same time a striking fact that the hinds' daughters are gradually allowing the Highland or Irish women to do all the field labor.

RAT-CATCHING.

A Chat With a Professional Rat-Catcher.

The Tricks of the Trade—The Kit—The Phosphorescent Rat—The Light Trick—A Curious Talk.

A little, undersized, well-knit, English-built, crop-haired man of middle age, was introduced, in a well-known sporting resort, an evening or two ago to a POST-DISPATCH reporter as Mr. Tommy Castillo, "light-weight fighter, long-distance pedestrian and champion rat-catcher."

"You don't mean that you catch rats for sport, like a ——"

"No, not like a 'terrier,' nor for fun, either, but for business; for good solid chucks, and don't forget it, neither, that a man what knows his business can catch them."

"But how? Have you got dogs, or ferrets or traps?"

"No, I haven't got no traps, nor no dogs, nor no ferrets; but I catch 'em with a tongs, and all I want is a bulls-eye lantern like coppers and burglars uses, and a man to hold the bag and a little science."

The reporter freely admitted his ignorance of any process of catching rats with tongs, a bull's-eye lantern and science, and the light-weight, long-distance and rat-catching champion expressed his feelings that one-half of the world doesn't know how the other half makes a living. With a glance of pity, he continued. "But then I suppose that you never lived any place but America. If you had traveled any you might know someting about rat-catching." The reporter, much abashed, endeavored to mollify the triple champion by a proffer of something of a liquid nature, and met with immediate acceptance, and a foaming tankard of 'alf and 'alf. For a few seconds the little eyes of the man with a strange profession beamed over the upper edge of the pewter, when the conversation was renewed, the reporter very humbie and very patronizing in his manner.

"I am going out to-night to do a little work in the cellar of the Everett House. Five years ago I cleaned every rat out of that place for them. Dick Toner and I came here together that time. Dick opened a rat-pit down on Fourth street, near Spruce, and he had some good dogs. One of them was a world-beater, not on rats, but in a pit, and never was beat until they steered him against a St. Louis brindle, named Sailor, who done him up on a sand barge out in the river one Sunday. Dick was a sporting man all over and a funny fellow in his way. Bergh, the humane society man, sent Dick up for two years for fighting dogs in New York, and Dick used to say that if Bergh had his own way, he would make a man chloroform an oyster before he could eat it. Well, that ainit got nothing to do with what I was saying. We had the pit, and we caught rats in the hotels and warehouses for five cents apiece and sold them at the pit for ten cents apiece to men who came there with terriers. We hilled fifteen cents with one rat those days and made plenty of money. High toned men used to come down on the quiet, and if they didn't understand the business, we caught them for five rats for a dollar. I never saw a man get so stuck on rat killing as one of the big St. Louis editors. One night Dick thought he would get solider, with this editor than he was and mind you, he had gone out with us once to see us at work, and so he got Paddy Rohan, the 'man terrier' we used to call him, to go into the pit against six rats and kill them with his teeth. Paddy was one of the best I ever saw in that business. He would grab a rat with one hand and break its back with his teeth quicker than a Scotch terrier could do it, but the editor he seemed to kind of get disgusted, and he went away and never came back. Toner didn't catch on very well with the St. Louis sports, and when Tom Kelly took 'Old Turk' down there one day, and first beheld his best dog, better than Billy, and then pitched in and licked Dick's trained bear, he got tired of the place and went back to New York, where he is catching rats and running a pit in Jersey City. I stayed here a while and boarded at Barnum's Hotel until in the place, and I would have been here yet getting my $40 a month and first-class board and my days all to myself if I hadn't got stuck on six-day walking, and walked off every dollar I had saved."

The pewter was replenished, and the rat-catcher again buried his mug in the contents. Breathing a sigh of contentment, and indicating by a wave of the hand that he would do the talking, he said: "In England and in all the cities of Europe, there are rat-catchers just like there are blacksmiths and other trades. There are several ways of going at the work. The rat-catcher goes about his work in several ways. I only work hotels and warehouses and use my tongue. The most scientific rat-catcher I ever knew was my father, and he lived in Birmingham, and does yet. Private houses were his specialty. He would go to the house and spend several hours locating through the halls. A house was to him and its population of rats just what a city is to its people. The rats have got their big streets, and their little streets and their alleys. A rat-catcher who knows his business can tell at a glance whether a hole is an exit or an entrance, and can tell what hall-ways are Broadways, and what are alleys. Then my father would go around with pieces of tin and nail up some holes, and let others alone. In this way he reduced the rat city to one main avenue into which all the rats would be chased. He would set a trap and catch one rats, that was enough for him. At night he would go back to the house, take the rat from the trap, rub him with phosphorous until he looked like he was on fire. The stuff would smart and away would run the rat, crazy as a bed-bug. All the other rats would get scared and run. Their favorite holes they would find nailed up, and in five minutes they would come tearing out into this one main street left for them by my father. This led to a close room, without any means of escape except the door, and when the rat with the phosphorus on cane tearing along last of all, the door would be closed and the old man, standing right in the midst of them, would commence working his tongs and pushing them up until they were all bagged.

THE NICEST PIECE OF WORK

I ever saw him do was one night when I went along to hold the bag. He had fixed the house so that all the rats were run into a dumb waiter running from a dining-room to the kitchen, and all we had to do was to hold the bag and they tumbled right in. We bagged over 400 of the squealers. They make an awful noise when they are on the stampede, and are as vicious as dogs. When you go in among the rats in the way I have been telling you about, you want to wear a pair of very thick and high boots and keep moving all the time. I have been bitten by rats clear through kip boots many a time. If you don't think rats will fight, just go to a rat pit some time, and see how the last one or two of a couple of dozen will get into the corner and show their teeth. I have heard about rat-catchers putting a bell on rats, to stampede the others, but the phosphorous would be the best. Ferrets are not used to stir them up. Rat-catchers generally have them for sale for use in houses after the wholesale cleaning out has been done. They will not run away as long as there are rats and mice for them to eat. That is pretty good 'alf and 'alf. Now, young fellow, if you will promise to do just as I tell you, and make no noise, I will take you out with me, and you can see how rats are caught on the American plan." The rat-catcher walked to the bar and got what he called his kit, a stout leathern bag, two pair of tongs, difficult of description, two pairs of soft carpet-slippers, a small phial of some cauterizing liquid and an ordinary bull's-eye lantern, completed the outfit. The tongs were about three feet in length, below the point of division, each arm being fork-shaped. It was explained that the tongs were made in that shape in order that the rat could be taken without injury, as in most places there are rat-pits to utilize the supply. A small boy, asleep in a corner of the resort, was waked up, and given the bundle, and, not lingering to hear "Mr. Sticks oblige,"—"Mr. Sticks" being the generic term by which the proprietor designates any one of several one-legged song and dance men who do duty each evening for the delectation of customers—the rat-catcher, and the item catcher, and sailed out. It was after eleven o'clock, and when the Fourth street hotel was reached, the night clerk had begun to yawn. A porter led the way to the subterranean labyrinth, underlying the whole building. As the rickety steps were carefully descended, the muffled squeal of rats was heard in every direction, and their scamper across the floors could be heard. The pantry and serving-room was reached, and it looked very dingy by the light of the single gas-jet. "If you feel nervous about rats you may sit up on a table," said the rat-catcher, as he leisurely took off his boots, put on the slippers, lit the bull's-eye, told the boy not to go to sleep, and then turned out the gas-jet and covered his lantern. All sounds from the rats had ceased when the party came in, and the first few moments spent in the total darkness were very depressing. The squealing was then resumed and the scampering heard across the floor. The rat-catcher pinched the reporter's arm warningly, then pulled back the slide of the lantern. A disc of light fell on the floor, and was moved rapidly to one side, when suddenly a rat that would have awakened the admiration of a Chinaman was struck by the rays. Had he been turned to stone he would not have been more motionless. The light falling upon him so suddenly seemed to fairly paralyze him. The rat-catcher stepped softly forward, taking care that the light shone on the motionless rodent, until he was within a few feet, when the tongs were brought into use, and, with a quick motion, the rat was thrown into the bag. Then darkness again and another flash of light, the cautious approach, and another rat took up lodgings in the bag. The operation became monotonous. The rat-catcher made but one mistake. He dropped his tongs, and the rat, which, in a dazed manner, was awaiting his doom, awoke from the spell that bound him and dashed off with the speed of Barus. "That is the last I will see of him," remarked the rat-catcher as he sat upon the table for a rest, and to give the rats a chance to regain their equanimity. The first hundred rats were captured within the hour, and then fourteen more were added to the lot. "I have got them too much excited to do anything more to-night," said the rat-catcher, as he lit the gas and told the boy with the bag to follow. An hour later the reporter saw several dozen of the yield fall victims to the skill and game of a beautiful bull terrier and a shaggy Scotch terrier.

Trade Marks.

The importance of a law that would protect trade-marks is receiving marked attention from the business public as well as from Congress. The brands on some goods adding largely to their commercial value, because their merit is known to the consumer, and the buyer looks to trade-mark as constituting his security. Thus the Gorham trade-mark on sterling silverware; Colgate's mark to indicate the various grades of their soaps and toilet goods, has also very high commercial value. The CHARTER OAK STOVE has a peculiar value of its own which so distinguishes it from all others that it has acquired very large commercial value. Lorillard Tobaccos are goods that the consumer asks for in the same way. The law cannot be too severe in protecting honest manufacturers. The burning of the great stove works gave dealers some excuse for substituting other stoves for the CHARTER OAK, but now that the CHARTER OAK factory is at work again, turning out over 200 stoves a day, the trade can get their orders filled promptly, and the year 1883 bids fair to surpass all previous years in the demand for the famous CHARTER OAK make.

High-Priced Dogs.

From the New York Times.

The entries for the seventh annual bench show of dogs, to be held in the Madison Square Garden next week, under the auspices of the Westminster Kennel Club, are complete, and the indications are that the show will be the finest ever given in this city. There will be 961 dogs on exhibition, exclusive of puppies, and, including these, nearly 1,100 animals. The entries for last year numbered but 1,041. A new feature of the show will be the exhibition of the large dogs, of which 158 have been entered, on open benches, so that their prominent points will be at all times open to the study of fanciers and amateurs. Some very famous sporting dogs will be on exhibition, including thirteen English pointers, which will be shown by the Westminster Kennel Club, with Sensation at the head, and including Bang Bang, Stunner, Restless and Rose, the mother of so many celebrated dogs, with a litter of pups. The contest among the champions this year will be very close. Among the champion English setters, Planiagenet and Prince, owned by J. H. Goodsell, of this city, and Thunder, owned by A. H. Moore, of Philadelphia, will appear. Mr. Moore's famous setter Leicester, valued at $10,000, will also be exhibited, but not for competition. Among the champion pointers will be Don, the first pointer to win a field trial, owned by R. T. Vandervort, of Pittsburg, and Knickerbocker, owned by George L. Wilrus, of Jersey City. In the small champion pointer class, Bravo, belonging to George Norbury Appeid, of Baltimore, and Dick, entered by Albert N. Wright, of this city, will compete. In the list of champion Irish setters are A. H. Moore's Berkley and John S. McIntosh's Biz, each valued at $15,000, and John S. McIntosh's Lady Clare, valued at $10,000. The champion bull-dogs are headed by Baister, owned by J.E. Thompson, of Lancaster, Mass., who likes his price at $5,000, and P. S. Barlow, of this city, will exhibit two "Leonbergs," known as Max and Tikla, and valued at $5,000 each. The highest-priced dog in the show will be the champion deerhound Hero, from Queen Victoria's kenneis, which is valued at $20,000. Lizzie Adele Jossiyn, of Pittsfield, Mass., has entered a German mastiff, named Stroich, bred by Prince Karl, of Prussia, and she marks his value "priceless." The dates for the show are May 8, 9, 10 and 11, and the exhibition will open from 9 a. m. to 10 p. m. each day.

GAS MONOPOLY.

The City of Paris Investigating Her Great Gas Fraud.

Facts and Figures That May Interest St. Louis People.

In June, 1879, a civil engineer, named Serf, read a report, entitled "Gas in Paris," to a syndical chamber of weavers, which had appropriated 5,000 francs to an investigation of the subject. This report was transmitted to the Municipal Council, who referred it to Mr. Alphand, Chief Engineer of the city, whose report was sent officially to the gas company, with a request for a reply. The company answered that it had a contract with the city on the subject of the price of gas and that the interest of the stockholders forced it to decline to make any reduction in the price "unless it received an indemnity." The City Council looked up the contract and thought that under article forty-eight they had the company on the hip. This article provided that the company undertook to allow the consumers to share in the benefit of any reduction in the cost of production which might result from new processes introduced into the manufacture of gas. The company answered that since the signing of the contract it had introduced no new process—all that it had done was to improve and perfect the process then in use. Mr. Serf made another report, in which he showed, from the printed reports of the company itself, that the cost of making a cubic metre of gas was in 1879 less than half of what it had been when the company began its operations in 1855. The discussion went on for some time, and last April the Councils directed the Prefect of the Seine to open negotiations with the company for an amicable adjustment of the difficulty. Like most important public enterprises in that country, the public and private lighting of a city is a monopoly in the hands of a corporation.

HISTORY OF THE MONOPOLY.

This monopoly was created in 1855 and conceded to a company with a capital of $8,500,000, divided into shares of $100 each. By the terms of the concession the company was to have the exclusive privilege of manufacturing gas in Paris for fifty years, at the expiration of which time the works were to become the property of the city, on the condition that it paid the company one-half of what they had cost. The company undertook to furnish gas at a rate not to exceed thirty centimes (six cents) a cubic meter to all private consumers, to erect and keep in order all lights needed for the streets and to furnish them and all buildings belonging to the city and government with gas at the rate of fifteen centimes (three cents) per cubic foot. Besides this the contract stipulated that the company should pay a rent to the city for the use of all streets through which they might lay pipes, and would share with it all its profits above a certain sum. Under this clause the city has received for some years past a handsome revenue from the gas company, which in 1882 amounted to $4,137,000. When Mr. Floquet, then Prefect, opened his negotiations with the company, he met with a point-blank refusal to reduce the price of gas unless the city would extend the period fixed for the termination of the concession for an additional term of forty years, or would abandon the whole of its share in the annual profits of the business. These terms being inadmissible, and none of the various compromises offered by the city being accepted by the company, the members of Councils got mad and determined to force the company to reduce its prices without any compensation. This has now been done in the shape of a peremptory order on the company not to charge in the future more than 25 centimes per cubic meter to private consumers, and it seems that the company will have to obey and sue the city for damages, in which case the courts will have to decide whether the company or the city is in the right. The present price of 30 centimes per cubic meter is higher than that in force in most of the other European capitals. At Vienna the price is 25 centimes; at Hamburg, Berlin and Brussels it is 20 centimes, and at London it is only 14 centimes per cubic meter. The price of 30 centimes per cubic meter is about the same as $1 70 per 1,000 cubic feet.

LARGE PROFITS.

The first year after the company was organized, 1856, the consumption of gas was 47,335,000 cubic meters (1,650,000,000 cubic feet), and that year it declared a dividend of eight per cent on its capital. Each succeeding year has shown a marked increase in the amount of gas consumed, the only falling off being in 1870 and 1871, when, owing to the siege of Paris, the works had to suspend operations during several months. The dividends also increased every year, and in 1870 they were at the rate of over twenty per cent on the par value of the shares. In 1870 the company watered its stock by doubling the number of shares standing in the name of each stockholder, and its dividend in 1882 amounted to $16 50 per share or 33 per cent on their original cost. The company now owns seven establishments for the manufacture of gas, and a large amount of other real estate. In the purchase of this property, in the erection of its works and in the laying of street mains, etc., it has expended since its creation $45,000,000. The street mains now measure over 1,200 miles, and it owns the 54,661 street lamps that light the city and its immediate environs. While gas is not nearly as extensively used in Paris as it is in an American city, the company has on its books 169,351 "subscribers," as it calls its private consumers, and as during the last few years the use of gas-meters has come into general favor among the smaller manufacturers of the city, it derives a large profit from the sale of the gas machines, of which it controls the patents. Besides its income from the sale of gas of 71,048,157 francs ($14,200,000), it received 17,454,896 francs ($3,490,000) from the sale of coke, 5,329,047 francs ($1,065,000) from the sale of tar and other products of the manufacture and 5,081,362 francs ($1,016,000) from all other sources. Its total receipts for 1882 were, therefore, 98,913,461 francs, or $19,782,000. The expenses during the same year, not including the share of the city in the profits, amounted to 56,251,414 francs, or $11,250,000, so that the actual profit resulting from the manufacture of gas in Paris in 1882 was $8,532,000.

A SINKING FUND.

The company sets aside a certain sum annually to form a reserve with which to redeem its stock and its bonded debt of 172,245,739 francs ($34,449,000) in 1905, when the works will become the property of the city, and it has also funds specially appropriated to paying retiring pensions to its employes. In the report made to the stockholders of the company at their annual meeting last week, the directors declare their intention of resisting the attempt to force a reduction of the price of gas by every means that the law places at their disposal, and it goes without saying that the declaration met with the hearty and unanimous approval of the stockholders. One of the peculiar tricks of arithmetical legerdemain that is to be found in this report is a long calculation by which the directors prove that the average profit of the company per cubic meter diminishes every year. Be the truth on this point on the side of the company or on the side of the city, the fact still remains that, owing to some unexplained cause, the dividends increase every year, and the company is also laying up a snug pile of millions by way of a nest-egg for the rainy weather that may be expected about 1905. The total expenditure for last year, exclusive of the share of the city in the profits, was 56,251,414 francs; of this 6,385,145 francs was incurred for State and municipal taxes, and the balance, 49,876,269 francs, or $9,975,000, may be set down as the actual cost of manufacturing and disposing of the 275,386,703 cubic meters (9,638,534,675 cubic feet) of gas consumed in the city of Paris during 1882. This includes not only the cost of materials and wages of workmen, but the salaries of the employees and the total cost of running the company. In comparing these figures with the results obtained by any Company in the United States, the reader must bear in mind that wages and salaries are very much lower in Paris than they are in America, but it must also not be forgotten that on that account many more hands are employed and much more manual labor made use of than is usual with us. The coal used by the Paris Gas Company costs $4 40 per ton, and a ton of coal produces, with the process in use, an average of 10,500 cubic feet of gas.

WORSE THAN EGYPTIAN BONDAGE.

Pharaoh of old made the lives of the Israelites bitter with cruel tyranny and hard work. Drunkenness embitters the lives of its victims by enslaving them with a vicious appetite and setting them at work at hard drinking. But there came a time when the rigor of Egyptian bondage was over, and Israel was set free. The wretched man who is in slavery to the power of strong drink has no such chance for freedom until some kind friend tells him of Dr. D'Unger's Cure for Drunkenness. Then comes his golden opportunity. At first he considers his case hopeless. But after making trial of Dr. D'Unger's "Cinchona Rubra" he finds his fetters broken and his appetite conquered. A San Francisco physician writes: "The case was the worst I have known anything about. The man, who would not stop drinking to please God, man or the devil, has given it up entirely, and is so filled with gratitude that when he meets me he can scarcely express his thankfulness for deliverance. He wants every one who is addicted to this habit to get the remedy and be saved from worse than death." Write to Dr. D'Unger, 81 South Clark street, Chicago.

WAITING.

I wait,
Till from my veiled brows shall fall
This baffling cloud, this wearying thrall,
Which holds me now from knowing all;
Until my spirit sight shall see
Into all Being's mystery,
See what it really is to be!

I wait,
While robbing days in mockery fling
Such cruel loss athwart my Spring,
And life flags on with broken wing;
Believing that a kindlier fate
The patient soul will compensate
For all it loses, ere too late.

I wait!
The Summer of the soul is long,
Its harvests yet shall round me throng,
In perfect pomp of sun and song.
In stormless mornings, yet to be,
I'll pluck from life's full-fruited tree
The joy to-day denied to me.

MARY CLEMMER.

A FRENCH INN MYSTERY.

On the evening of March 27, 1875, a traveling carriage was driven up to the door of the inn which for nearly half a century had borne the name of "Les Trois Canards."

This wayside inn was on the old post road leading into Chalons, and half a mile from the Chateau de Sonteau. But few travelers of late had honored this old inn with their patronage, and its landlord, Jean Bernis, and his wife, fifteen years younger than himself, a fascinating little brunette, with the grace, piquancy and bearing of a woman of better degree than that of her present station, had but two servants, one a house-girl and the other a hostler. There was little need of even that help, save, perhaps, on such days as there might happen to be a grand review of Government troops at Chalons.

The carriage driven up in front of the inn the driver leaped from his seat and opened the door of the vehicle.

"This is 'Les Trois Canards,'" said the coachman, in a respectful tone. "The inn which is near the Chateau de Sonteau."

A man came out of the carriage, followed by one in the plain livery of a valet.

"Rudolph," he said to the servant, "bring out the portmanteau and dressing-case. We will stop here to-night. In the morning we will be in time enough for the visit to the chateau."

Master and valet at once entered the inn, and shortly afterward were shown to the small suite of rooms, a little cramped salon, or parlor, with an adjoining bed-chamber, which the latter was to occupy.

"Did you see Monsieur's valet?" said the landlord to his wife.

"Yes; and he resembles some one at the chateau. Ah, I remember! Why, he is the very image of Cherin, the keeper of the lodge, who has charge of the chateau."

"I would have sworn it was Cherin," was the landlord's answer. "The likeness is wonderful."

The newly arrived guest's name was M. Robert de Launey, a banker, en route from Chalons to Paris. His valet, a handsome fellow of five and thirty years, informed the landlord that his master intended purchasing the chateau and using it as a summer residence. Half the purchase money was to be paid in the morning.

The banker and his valet had arrived at the inn at 8 o'clock. The conversation of the valet with the inn-keeper had occurred at 9 o'clock, the exact time being, as she afterward testified, particularly noticed by Mme. Bernis.

At half past 9 the valet was called for by his master. Fifteen or twenty minutes later he descended to the little bar-room, and asked in no very pleasant manner the nearest road to the chateau, adding that "men who are served have no feeling, and those who serve them get no rest. I am to go through the darkness to-night—now—to the chateau with a message to M. de Sonteau."

"But M. de Sonteau, at so late an hour, may not receive your message. He is a surly, quick-tempered man, and his late misfortunes—the loss of his fortune at the gaming tables and his natural ugliness of disposition—"

"Will make him receive me all the quicker when he knows I am come from the banker, who is to pay him on account 300,000 francs to-morrow morning. Here is the message, sealed up as tight as a tomb. A horse, landlord, and quickly, so I may get back in time for a night's rest."

The landlord gave him the horse and the necessary directions for reaching the chateau.

"I will wait up for you until you return," said the landlord.

"M. de Launey will ring if he needs any service," were the parting words of the valet as he rode off into the darkness.

It was fifteen or twenty minutes past ten when the grumbling valet rode away.

"I would have sworn he was Cherin, the lodge keeper of the chateau; the same build, the voice, the expression of the eyes—the very counterpart of each other are those two."

Madame merely answered with a smile. She already felt a strange interest in the valet, for his resemblance to Cherin suggested to her that he might make as good a lover as was the lodge-keeper, whom her jealous husband had, months before, forbidden to enter the inn.

Twice, once at 11 and once half an hour later, had M. de Launey, the guest, rung and made inquiry if his valet had returned.

At 12 o'clock there was the clatter of horses' hoofs, the valet passed in, greeted the landlord, and, bidding him retire, ascended the narrow stairs to his master's rooms. The landlord slept below at the rear, in a room which adjoined the kitchen, the servants sleeping—the hostler over the stable and the house servant in a room adjoining the public dining-room.

At 6 in the morning the landlord and his wife were suddenly startled from their slumber by loud cries and a violent knocking at the door of the kitchen. The noise also brought in the housemaid and the hostler, who were already up and beginning their morning's work.

"Monsieur Bernis, get up quickly," was the cry. "My master has been murdered. Help! help!"

It was the valet who shouted the alarm, and speedily the inmates of the inn followed him to his master's rooms.

Surely it was a horrible sight. There lay the banker near the easy chair in which he must have been sitting, in dressing gown and slippers, his shirt bosom and clothing saturated with blood.

His throat had been cut from ear to ear. On the floor, near the little table upon which stood the still burning lamp, was the weapon with which the murder had been accomplished, its blade and handle covered with the red evidence of his fearful work.

The frightened landlord at once dispatched the hostler to Chalons for the police, and the house servant ran wildly up the road to apprise the nearest neighbors, who were few.

The valet volunteered to ride to the chateau and apprise M. de Sonteau of the horrible event, and, rushing to the stable and saddling a horse, was, five minutes later, galloping down the road. When he returned he was alone. M. de Sonteau would be at the inn soon, he said.

The police arrived, and an investigation was at once begun. The Prefect of Chalons was present in person, with three or four of his shrewdest officials. The valet gave his statement. While he was making it, Mad. Bernis, pale and trembling, and looking all the prettier with the excitement under which she labored, kept her eyes fixed upon the valet with a strange expression. She noticed that he never once looked at her; that his eyes were fixed solely on the Prefect.

"My master sent me last evening to the chateau with a message to M. de Sonteau. The message was written and sealed, and I only know that it was important. When I delivered it to M. de Sonteau he was about retiring. He bade me wait. Presently he gave me a verbal answer in these words: 'Tell M. de Launey that I will comply with his wish. M. de Sonteau never violates his word.' Then I rode back to the inn, where the landlord was still up awaiting my master's ring. M. de Launey was then sitting in an easy chair. I gave him M. de Sonteau's reply. He merely smiled, bade me open his dressing case and place the package which was upon the table beside him under the pillow of his bed. He also bade me examine the lock on the door leading to the passage of the staircase. "Then he said: 'You can go to bed. Awaken me at 6. I will start for the chauteau at 9.' I left the room, and that was the last I saw of my poor master alive."

"You knocked at his door according to his orders, at 6 in the morning?" questioned the Prefect.

"Yes, Monsieur le Prefect—ten minutes before 6. I rapped twice, and, receiving no answer, I lifted the iron latch of the door, and to my surprise found it unlocked. I pushed the door open, and then I saw him lying as he is now. Scarcely knowing what I did, I ran down stairs and gave the alarm. That is all I know."

"What was in the package you placed under his pillow?"

"Monsieur, I am not positive, but I think it must have contained bank notes—the purchase money of the chateau."

"Do you know that this package is missing, and that your late master's watch and chain are not to be found?"

"I do not, Monsieur. I know nothing since I opened the door this morning."

Madame Bernis was questioned. She added nothing new to the valet's statement—merely corroborating a portion of it. But she still held her gaze upon the valet's face. She could not catch a glance from him in return.

M. de Sonteau arrived from the chateau. A morose-looking man, with a strange, set expression of countenance, thin lips, and heavy, black mustache.

"M. Robert de Launey only needed to sign the legal papers and pay me the stipulated sum of 300,000 francs to become the owner of the ancestral home of my family. His valet brought me a message—yes. It was a request that I would arrange so that the business should be transacted at an earlier hour than had been agreed upon. That was all. I sent a verbal reply. That was all, Monsieur Prefect. Am I at liberty to depart?"

"Most certainly, M. de Sonteau."

The landlord, the house servant and the hostler were examined, but they gave no clue to the mystery of this awful crime.

The Prefect decided to hold in close surveillance the valet, the landlord and his wife, and gave the case into the keeping of a couple of his sharpest detectives.

The weapon, a knife, with which the murder was committed, was minutely examined. While it was being inspected the valet seemed nervous and agitated, and once or twice, his eyes meeting the glance of Madame Bernis fastened upon him as if watching his every motion, he trembled violently.

The woman was evidently preparing herself for some fearful emergency. She was pale, and her feature, wore a rigid, resolute expression.

"M. le Prefect, hold the knife nearer to me that I may see it closely," she said.

The Prefect obeyed the request. She did not touch the blood-stained instrument of death.

"Have you ever seen that knife before?"

Again the woman inspected it, and still more closely. Then she started, and with a shudder as of supreme horror, exclaimed:

"Mon dieu, mon dieu, it is his knife!"

"Whose knife?"

The valet made a movement toward the door, as if to leave the apartment. An officer intercepted him.

"Whose knife?" repeated the Prefect.

"It is the stable knife which I have repeatedly seen in the hands of Jacques Cherin, the lodge-keeper of the Chateau de Sonteau!" she answered, her eyes still fixed upon the valet.

"But Cherin has not been here since a month ago," said the landlord.

"That is Cherin's knife, nevertheless. His initials are cut or scratched upon the handle—scrape the blood off and you will see them—J. C."

The Prefect did so. The woman was right.

The valet, now almost civil in the face, sank upon his knees in abject terror at the Prefect's feet, crying, "Monsieur, save me! I could not help it!"

Now the woman's face lighted up. "Ah, you see, husband, I was right when I said this valet looked enough like Cherin to be Cherin or his twin brother. Look at him. It is Cherin."

"Yes, I am Cherin. I am not Rudolphe, the valet. I am the lodge-keeper of the chateau." A look of profound pity came over the woman's face. "And this man," she murmured so low that only the Prefect heard her distinctly, "was my lover, and in this wretch's embraces I forgot my duty to so good a man as my husband. God forgive me! What better am I than a murderer?" Turning to the Prefect she said in a low voice, heard: "Monsieur, there is an awful mystery in last night's work, and this wretch can explain it—put him to the rack!"

Cherin had fallen to the floor. The officials lifted him into a chair. As he fell to the floor they saw his hand quickly taken from his mouth by a spasmodic action of the arm.

"What have you done?"

"Nothing," answered the valet. "You were too quick for me—I—I—have mercy on me. I confess all. I am Cherin. That is my knife. It was I who murdered M. de Launey. The packages of money I found under his pillow I gave to my master (de Sonteau) an hour since, before he left here. But it was not I who arrived here with the banker. That was his valet, Rudolphe."

"Where is this Rudolphe—the real valet? Was he your confederate?" sternly demanded the Prefect.

"I will tell you all. When the valet arrived last night at the chateau with a message from his master, M. Sonteau, my master, who was troubled at being obliged to sell his chateau, and nearly wild over the poverty to which his gambling had brought him, called me to him and said with a terrible look: 'Jacques, would you make any sacrifices to save me this chateau and make me once more rich?'" Not knowing what he meant, and blindly loving him as I did, I swore to him that I would dare death itself to serve him. Then he said: 'It is an inspiration. I will kill this miserable valet who is in the hall; you shall assume his clothes and return as he. You will then cut the throat of this de Launey, search his room for his money, and if you do your work properly you will not be suspected. The inspiration has to come me through the extraordinary resemblence you bear to the valet.'

"Monsieur le Prefect, I dared not refuse, fool that I was. M. Sonteau, my master, killed the valet with the blow of an iron rod, and, stripping his body of coat, vest, pants, shoes and necktie, we carried it to the wine vault beneath the chateau, and threw it into an empty port wine cask. Then I put on the dead valet's clothes, mounted his horse, and rode back. I entered the banker's room. He was asleep in an easy chair with his feet toward the open fire. On the table was his dressing-case and the package of bank bills. I caught him by the hair, and, with one blow of the knife, ended his life.

"I took the money and his watch and charm and crept out of the room, carefully closing the door, and went to my room. When my master came in an hour since to give in his statement, I gave him, unperceived, the package. The watch is up-stairs, hidden between the mattresses of my bed.

"Monsieur, that is all."

An hour later M. de Sonteau was arrested. He was afterward tried at Chalons, found guilty on the evidence of his accomplice, and expiated his crime upon the guillotine April 19 following. Cherin suffered the same expiation five days later.

Both the chateau and the inn of "Les Trois Canards" are now in ruins.

EGYPTIAN PENSIONS.

Lively Debate on the Grants to Lord Wolseley and Lord Alcester.

From a London Paper.

A full house assembled in the Commons to hear the discussion of the grants to the Egyptian commanders. Mr. Labouchere opposed them. He quite admitted that war was a necessity, but these special gifts to commanders were merely relics of the bad time when it was considered far grander to swagger about with a sword than to be occupied with any other profession. However, he would have the House regard this case on its own merits. He admitted the case of Waterloo, when the country was saved from invasion, or any case where we met foemen worthy of our steel; but who should say that this was one of these cases? ("Hear, hear!") And why make a distinction between the civil and military professions? Why not reward the leaders of the opposition—gentlemen who had done great service to their country (laughter) as well as military and naval commanders? He held that Lord Alcester was adequately rewarded by the rules of the service—by his pay while in command of the fleet, his pension and his salary as a naval lord, not to speak of his share (£961) of the vote recently granted to the forces. The government might rest assured that those who had to toil for their living thoroughly objected to their pittance being taxed in order that some hereditary peer might enjoy the titled idleness of the other House. If these payments were to be made at all let us make them ourselves. If we were to gild coronets let us pay for the gilding, and not be lavish at the expense of posterity. ("Hear, hear!") He had no doubt that he should be followed into the lobby by some of Her Majesty's Ministers. (Laughter.) He had no doubt, for instance, as to what the President of the Board of Trade would do. The right honorable gentleman was not the man to add to the number of those "who toil not, neither do they spin." (Laughter.) He was sure, indeed, that the right honorable gentlemen would be as much opposed as he himself was to any one deriving his income not from the unearned increment—that was bad enough—but from the earned wages of those who do toil and spin. (Laughter, and opposition cheers.) He had no doubt also that the President of the Local Government Board would be with him. They had heard about his mission to the Cabinet being to permeate his colleagues with his own particular views. (Laughter.) He trusted that not only the President of the Board of Trade, but others among his permeated colleagues, would follow him in the lobby. (Renewed laughter.) Jingoism was happily asleep. ("No, no!" and laughter from the opposition.) Let them not awake it. (Cheers from below the gangway.) He had to move as an amendment that "In the opinion of this House the services of Lord Alcester during our naval operations in Egypt were not of such a character as to satisfy this House as to the desirability of assenting to the proposal submitted to it in this bill."

SIR WILFRID LAWSON.

Sir Wilfrid Lawson said that he would vote with great pleasure a large sum for the widows and orphans of the poor soldiers whom the Government sent to Egypt to be slaughtered [cheers,] and with greater pleasure he would vote relief for the widows and orphans of the poor Egyptians slain while fighting in a far better cause. [Liberal cheers from below the gangway.] He had no objection to voting honors—he would give an honor to the right honorable gentleman the leader of the opposition. [Laughter and cheers.] In his opinion the right honorable gentleman had done harder work in his lifetime than either Lord Wolseley or Lord Alcester. He remembered when the right honorable gentleman went as one of the commissioners to settle a great question without war—[opposition cheers]—to settle it like a statesman and a Christian as he was. [Laughter]. He would vote the right honorable gentleman £20,000, and make him a Duke besides. [Laughter and cheers.] But it really seemed to him quite absurd to say that the services of Lord Wolseley and Lord Alcester were on a par as regards this Egyptian question. ("Hear, hear.") If had delighted the heart of the Prime Minister to talk to-night of the bombardment of Alexandria straight off. (Laughter.) They would get at it yet. It would not be an operation, but it would be a war before long. (Opposition laughter and cheers.) This love of display of military force was increasing, and it seemed almost like a dream when he thought of what happened three years ago, when they all marched with pride and pleasure under the banner of the right honorable gentleman, the Prime Minister, who was marching through Midlothian. They all came in pledged to peace, retrenchment and reform. Why, the first thing they did within two years was to rush upon their foreign foes, dressed up in the Tory uniform, the right honorable gentleman leading them, and they marched into Egypt, singing

We don't want to fight, but by jingo if we do.

(Laugher.) It was time, he said, that this should stop, and he hoped it would. He regretted greatly the abject state into which they had fallen under the counsels of recreant radicals, sanguinary Christians and fighting Quakers. (Renewed laughter.)

The House divided:—

THE SMOKER'S MUSE.

Now the kind nymph to Bacchus born
By Morpheus' daughter, she that seems
Gifted upon her natal morn
By him with fire, by her with dreams,
Nicotia, dearer to the Muse
Than all the grape's bewildering juice,
We worship, unforbid of thee;
And as her incense floats and curls
In airy spires and wayward whirls,
Or poises on its tremulous stalk
A flower of fairest reverie,
So winds and loiters, idly free,
The current of unguided talk.
Now laughter-rippled and now caught
In smooth, dark pools of deeper thought.
Meanwhile thou mellowest every word,
A sweetly unobtrusive third;
For thou hast magic beyond wine,
To unlock natures each to each;
The unspoken thought thou canst divine;
Thou fill'st the pauses of the speech
With whispers that to dreamland reach
And frozen fancy-springs unchain
In Arctic outskirts of the brain;
Sun of all inmost confidences,
To thy rays doth the heart unclose
Its formal calyx of pretences,
That close against rude day's offenses,
And open its shy midnight rose!

A CUTTLE-FISH DINNER.

A Reporter Dines With the Editor of the Chine e-American.

From the New York Morning Journal.

The Chinese editor invited the reporter to dinner. The two entered a Chinese restaurant in the second-story of No. 7 Mott street, kept by Chung Foh Low, the Chinese Charley Delmonico. The room was plain and neat. On the wall was a crayon drawing of Hendrick Hudson sailing up the Hudson in a Chinese junk. The picture was made by a Celestial artist in Mott street. A hundred tea-pots glistened on a shelf. Around the apartment hung dried victims of the dog law and smoked rats. Tea served without milk or sugar in dainty cups was said, though not the best, to be better than any made in American restaurants. Roast duck, chicken and pork, brought to the table cut in small pieces, were eaten with fruit soy, bean soy and mustard. Soy is a sort of sweet ketchup. "Here comes the cuttle-fish," said the editor, as a smoking platter whose ingredients were cuttle-fish, chicken gizzards and livers, Chinese mushrooms, bamboo shoots, garlic, pork and Chinese spices, was placed on the table.

"I have eaten English, Spanish, French, American and Chinese cooking," said the editor, "and Chinese cooking is the best of all. French comes next; American last. The cook here gets $75 a week. There are four Chinese restaurants in New York. Meals in them cost from ten cents to $25. I saw a duck served here, of which the head was filled with wine, one side of the body with soup, the other with spices; each of the wings contained five different kinds of fruit; the tail was filled with salad. A dish of shark's fin cost $15; of bird's-nest pudding, $100."

"The Chinese are quite luxurious?"

"We have many rich men in China. The richest one is worth five times as much as Jay Gould. The fortune of the Mongolian Crœsus nearly equals the amount of your national debt. His name, Pawn Kim Lung, signifies 'Pawn, the golden-dragon.' Like Jay Gould, he is fond of flowers. At his country residence he has hanging gardens which cost $3,000,000."

"Is he a plumber?"

Unfortunately, no. Only a pawnbroker. If he were a plumber, he would be worth $100,000,000."

"Is plumbing in China a crime?"

"Yes."

"What do they do with people caught plumbing in China?"

"Crucify them."

"He has pawnshops in all the leading cities in China. That country has 3,000 leading cities. He has, therefore, 3,000 pawnshops. He is the Celestial Simpson. He is held to be the financial equal of the whole family of European Rothschilds. I think he is a Chinese Jew. There are Jews in China, and they pattern after the Mongolians, even to the wearing of pig-tails."

"Does the 'Golden Dragon' amuse himself with fast horses?"

"No; with fast women."

"How much does it take to make a man rich in China?"

"Ten thousand dollars. The possession of $100,000 corresponds to an American millionaire. When a man has $100,000 he becomes a friend of the Emperor. Some of the ignorant Chinese coolies have acquired as much. Plutocratic society in our country is as base as it is in yours. The Chinese in Mott street are of the middle class. They are neither low nor high."

"Do Chinese gentlemen dress expensively?"

"Quite so. When I was a student I used to wear a native costume that cost $200. Some of the swell dudes in Pekin wear suits of clothes which cost $2,000 each. They are far more exquisite than your Fifth-avenue swells."

For Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Depression of Spirits and General Debility, in their various forms; also as a preventive against Fever and Ague and other Intermittent Fevers, the "Ferro-Phosphorated Elixir of Calisaya," made by CASWELL, HAZARD & CO., New York, and sold by all Druggists, is the best tonic; and for patients recovering from Fever or other sickness it has no equal. 1

Assignee's Sale.

DOCTOR WHITTIER

617 St. Charles Street, St. Louis, Mo.,

A regular graduate of two medical colleges, has been longer engaged in the treatment of Chronic, Nervous, Skin and Blood Diseases than any other physician in St. Louis, as city papers show and all old residents know. Consultation at office or by mail, free and invited. A friendly talk or opinion costs nothing. When it is inconvenient to visit the city for treatment, medicine can be sent by mail or express everywhere. Curable cases guaranteed; where doubt exists it is frankly stated.

Nervous Prostration, Debility, Mental and Physical Weakness, Mercurial and other affections of Throat, Skin and Bones, Blood Impurities and Blood Poisoning, Skin Affections, Old Sores and Ulcers, impediments to Marriage, Rheumatism, Piles. Especial attention to cases from over-worked brain. SURGICAL Cases receive Special Attention.

Diseases arising from Indiscretion, Excess Exposure or Indulgence, producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Debility, Dimness of Sight or Perverted Vision, Defective Memory, Pimples on the Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Want of Pleasure in Life, Want of Ambition, Unfitness to Marry, Melancholy, Dyspepsia, Headache, Restlessness, Loss of Spirits, Pains in the Back, etc., are treated with unparalleled success. Treatment without hindrance to business, safe, sure and permanent. Sent everywhere by mail or express.

Catarrh, Throat, Nose and Lung Disease. Liver Complaints.

It is self-evident that a physician paying particular attention to a class of cases attains great skill, and physicians in regular practice all over the country, knowing this, frequently recommend cases to this oldest office in America, where every known appliance is resorted to, and the proved good remedies of all ages and countries are used. A whole house is used for office purposes, and all are treated with skill in a respectful manner; and knowing what to do, no experiments are made. On account of the great number of cases applying, the charges are kept low, often lower than is demanded by others. If you secure the skill and get a speedy and perfect cure, that is the important matter.

Administrators' Notices.

INFORMATION wanted of the whereabouts of Charles W. Noell.—Charles W. Noell, son of John W. and Mary A. Noell, was born at Louisiana, Pike county, Mo., April 30, 1837. He was reared up from early infancy in Perry county, Mo. In the latter part of the summer of 1865 he left his home in Perry county to enlist in the United States army, since which time his family have never seen him, but in former years frequently heard from him by letter. In February, 1877, he was stationed at Omaha Barracks, Nebraska, under the command of General Crook. At the time of his departure, in 1865, he was of robust figure, weighed about 160 pounds, was about 5 feet 9 inches high, was slightly round-shouldered, had jet black curly hair, light blue eyes, his complexion, which had been medium fair, was somewhat darkened, and his face and body slightly pitted by small-pox, with which he had suffered during the earlier part of the same summer. I have in my hands belonging to said Noell, if alive, and if not, to his legal heirs, the sum of seven hundred and forty-two dollars and fifty cents ($742 50), being amount due him at a final settlement of his mother, Mary Ann Noell's, estate, filed April 17, 1883, in the Probate Court, City of St. Louis, and if this money is not claimed by June, 1883, it will be paid into the Treasury of the State of Missouri. He has also one undivided third interest in certain real estate. For further information apply to

EXECUTOR'S SALE OF REAL ESTATE.—In obedience to a renewed order of sale made by the Probate Court for the City of St. Louis, at the March term, 1883, of said court, I, the undersigned executor of the last will and testament of John F. Mauntel, deceased, will on at the eastern front door of the Court-house of the city of St. Louis, and during the session of the Circuit or Probate Court of said city, between the hours of 10 o'clock in the forenoon and 5 o'clock in the afternoon of that day, expose to sale, at public vendue or outcry, the following described real estate, viz:
1. A tract of land in the city of St. Louis and in fractional block 89 in DeWard's survey of St Louis Commons, containing, inclusive of the road bounding it on the west, 13 2-100 acres, and exclusive of said road 10 02-100 acres, more or less, and described as bounded west by Stringtown road, north by a tract sold by Jean Pourcelli to Alexander Desnoyer by deed recorded in book V 2, page 64, east by a street or road called Kansas avenue, and south by street or road called Neosho street. On this ground is situated an elegant eighteen-room, two-story double brick dwelling-house (slate roof), containing newest modern improvements, with large, commodious stables and outhouses, complete sewerage to all parts, an abundance of choicest fruit, shade and ornamental trees, shrubs and grapevines.
2. The following described parcel of land lying in the city of St. Louis, Missouri, and in John C. Ivory's subdivision (known as South St. Louis subdivision), and more particularly described as follows, viz.: Lots numbered from twenty-one to thirty-four inclusive, in the western part of block ninety-two (92) of said suburb; bounded west by Stringtown road, or Louisiana avenue, north by lots twenty and thirty-five of the same block, east by Virginia avenue, and south by Termination street, together with all the right, title and interest of the grantors (John C. Ivory and wife) in the west half of the ground designated on the plat of said subdivision as Virginia avenue, and in the ground therein designated as Termination street, and adjoining said tract of land on the south.
3. Lots numbered from twenty-one to thirty-four, inclusive, in the eastern part of block ninety-two (92) of South St. Louis suburb (John C. Ivory's subdivision), said lots bounded west by Virginia avenue, north by lots twenty and thirty-five of said block, east by Kansas avenue, and south by Termination street, together with all the right, title and interest of the grantors (the said John C. Ivory and wife) in the ground designated on said plat as Termination street, and the east half of the ground designated thereon as Virginia avenue, and the west half of the ground designated thereon as Kansas avenue, as said lots and streets are designated on the plat of said subdivision made in 1858, and of record in the office of the Recorder of Deeds in the city of St. Louis.
4. A tract of land in the city of St. Louis, Missouri, and in the commons of said city, being the western portion of fractional block number ninety-five on the plat of Charles DeWard's survey of said common, and recorded in the Recorder's office of the county (now city) of St. Louis, and containing two acres, more or less, and being bounded north by the south line of Block 92 of the St. Louis common, east by the continuation of the centre line of said block 92, southwardly (which is also the west line of property sold to Ferdinand Meyrose, by deed recorded in Book 355, page 100) south by the south line of said common, and west by Stringtown road. It being the western portion of the property sold by the city of St. Louis to Bernardino Florez by deed recorded in said Recorder's office, in book X 5, page 355, and by said Florez to John F. Mauntel by deed dated 11th April, 1866, and recorded in the Recorder's office in book 311, page 437.
Upon the following terms, in said order prescribed, viz: One-third of the purchase-money to be paid in cash, and the balance in two equal installments payable in one and two years respectively from the day of sale, the deferred payments to bear interest at six per cent per annum, and to be secured by deed of trust on the property sold.

Charles Green
vs.
Guy Briggs (a minor), Edmund B. Briggs (a minor) and C. B. Somerville.
It appearing from the petition herein, duly verified by plaintiff's affidavit attached thereto, that the defendants, Guy Briggs, Edmund B. Briggs and C. B. Somerville, are non-residents of the State of Missouri, therefore, on motion of plaintiff by attorneys.
It is ordered that said defendants be notified that a civil action has been commenced against them, the object and general nature of which is, by the first count of said petition, to reform and correct an erroneous description of certain lots of ground contained in a certain mortgage deed, and the record thereof in book 608 of the Recorder's office of the city of St. Louis, Missouri, executed by Edward B. Briggs deceased, so that the said mortgage deed and record thereof shall correctly describe and locate the real estate in and by said mortgage conveyed to one Thomas Sefton, his heirs and assigns, to secure the payment of a certain note in said mortgage deed, described, the property conveyed in said mortgage deed dated the 25th day of October, 1878, being situated in the city of St. Louis, Missouri, but described therein as follows, to-wit:
All and singular the following described real estate situated, lying and being in the county of St. Louis, State of Missouri, and in the subdivision known as the Briggs estate, according to the plat of the commissioners in partition, recorded in the Recorder's office of said county, in book 321, page 146, to-wit.
Lots numbered one, two, three, four, five and six, in block numbered one, which said lots front, in the aggregate, three hundred and forty-three feet and three and one-half inches on the Clayton road, and run southwardly to a twenty-foot alley one hundred and fifty-six feet and ten and one, half inches, or on a line at right angles to the Clayton road one hundred and fifty-two feet six and one-half inches, and are bounded on the east by Edmund street, and on the west by Martin street. Also lots numbered eleven, twelve, thirteen fourteen and fifteen of block numbered three, which lots front in the aggregate two hundred and fifty feet on Briggs street and run eastwardly one hundred and fifty feet to a twenty foot alley."
And by the second count of said petition to secure a decree of the court fixing the amount due plaintiff, as assignee, owner and holder of said mortgage deed and note aforesaid, alleged in the petition to be the sum of $2,000, with interest thereon at the rate of eight per cent per annum since the 8th day of December, 1881. That by said decree defendants be forever barred and foreclosed of all right and equity of redemption in the property described in said mortgage deed as it may be reformed by the court. That all said property, or so much thereof as may be necessary therefor, may be sold to the highest bidder, for cash, according to law and the practice in such cases in this court, and that the proceeds of such sale, after payment of the costs of suit and sale of said property, be applied to the payment of the amount which may be found by the court to be due plaintiff under said note and mortgage deed aforesaid.
And unless they, the defendants herein, appear at the term of this court to be begun and held at the city of St. Louis on the first Monday of June next, and on or before the third day thereof answer the plaintiff's petition, the same will be taken against them as confessed.
And it is further ordered that a copy hereof be published according to law in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, a newspaper printed and published in the city of St. Louis.

The St. Louis School of Fine Arts.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

There appeared recently, in one of our morning papers, an extract from the letter of a St. Louisan to the Louisville Courier-Journal, wherein the writer treats the people of that city to an imaginative real account of the manner in which the St. Louis School of Fine Arts is conducted. The writer preserves all through a tone of polite gallantry, indulging in a great many complimentary adjectives, especially towards the young lady students, but his description of the industry and talent displayed, and the manner in which the school proceeds, is mostly unjust, and calls for a denial. For instance, he says "the young people attend school for the purpose of learning to paint plaques, and teaching their friends to do the same," or words to that effect. Now, this is not correct, for, although there are some who attend only to learn the rudiments, as an accomplishment, there are others who go through the entire course, to fit themselves to become finished artists. The school comprises many matrons and young society girls who have actually to steal time from domestic and social claims to pursue their art studies; young girls or boys just emancipated from boarding school or college, and entering the field of art with great zeal; men and women who devote time and energies to make art their life-work. Surely none of these possess the flippancy, accredited to them by the Courier-Journal correspondent. A proof conclusive that his conception of the ambition and efforts of the students was unjust would be a visit to the school whilst in session. In the Antique Room, if Ajax and the young Augustus possessed the power of sight, how many times they would see themselves reflected on the papers of the tireless young workers. Many have been so assiduous that the difficult outline of the Gladiator has by one person been daily drawn for thirty consecutive days. In the Life Class, this week, visitors seeing the visible and concentrated interest displayed by these more advanced students would be sufficiently convinced of their earnestness did not the splendid portraiture of the young mulatto girl serving as the model prove it more perfectly. Take, for example, men who have studied in this school, John H. Fry and J. M. Barnsly, the latter a promising student, now in Paris, the former possessing all the elements and promises of a great artist. Both "The Blacksmith" and "The Saxon Guard," from his brush, show that he who could by them gain such local fame in one winter will, in years to come, rank amongst the great artists of the world. The school is under the direction of men, bulwarks of our city, and who further the school's advancement in every way—men such as Wayman Crow, Henry Hitchcock and others of equal prominence and intellect, who have entrusted its active management to Prof. Ives, a man noted for his superior direction. Then the teachers are Gutherz, Harney and Fry, all artists of distinction, who, with Miss Fairchild, the teacher of beginners, possess thoroughly the faculty of imparting their knowledge. The Art School, though not long established, is gaining national fame; the art aspirants display much genius and talent and are tireless in devoting energies and attention to perfecting themselves.

ADVICE TO CONSUMPTIVES.

On the appearance of the first symptoms—as general debility, loss of appetite, pallor, chilly sensations, followed by night-sweats and cough—prompt measures for relief should be taken. Consumption is scrofulous disease of the lungs;—therefore use the great anti-scrofula, or blood-purifier and strength-restorer, Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery." Superior to cod liver oil as a nutritive, and unsurpassed as a pectoral. For weak lungs, spitting of blood, and kindred affections, it has no equal. Sold by druggists the world over. For Dr. Pierce's pamphlet on Consumption, send two stamps to WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Buffalo, N. Y.

AMUSEMENTS.

Attractions at the Theaters Next Week.

Various Bnefits—James Hannerty—The Theodore Thomas Concerts—"Monte Cristo" at the Olympic—Notes.

The amusement patronage of the week has been fairly divided. At the Grand Opera-house a splendid engagement has been played by Rice's Surprise Party, a popular reorganization of talent and beauty. The names of the graceful artists appearing in the musical comedy melange, "Pop," guaranteed crowded houses throughout the week. Some fresh faces were introduced to the St. Louis public. Miss Kate Castleton, a brilliant, charming little actress, made a decided impression. She is a bright ornament of the company, combining grace and chic with ease and refinement. Her stage presence is winning to a degree; her style is original, and she impresses her audience with her versatile talent in every gesture, utterance and movement. Misses Lillie Grubb, May Stembler and Ida Smith, favorite members of Ford's Opera Company, of summer season memories, are included in Rice's party. John Mackay, one of the best comedians on the stage, contributes much to the success of "Pop." It is repeated at the matinee to-day, and for the last time this evening. At the People's, Oliver Doud Byron played to fair houses in "Across the Continent," supported by Miss Kate Byron. The scenic effects were excellent. Cora Van Tassel, supported by the character-artist, Edwin Young, appeared at Pope's with a good company. For the matinee and farewell performances they present "Enoch Arden." At the Olympic, the programme has been furnished by Atkinson's Jollities, with Jennie Yeamans and Frank Daniels in "The Electric Spark." The attractions of the coming week are foreshadowed below.

THE OLYMPIC.

At this elegant house to-morrow evening "Monte Cristo" will be presented with James O'Neill, supported by the company of Booth's Theater, New York. Some interest attaches to this engagement. The star is an acknowledged favorite here, and the company is composed of the best quality of the New York stage. A successful engagement is assured.

GRAND OPERA-HOUSE.

To-morrow evening and for the coming week there will be "Rooms for Rent," at the Grand Opera-house. This is an amusing four-act comedy with Newton Beers, a popular young comedian, in the role of a Bohemian. The production abounds in ludicrous situations and is mirth-provoking to a degree. Mr. Beers will be well supported.

THE PEOPLE'S.

At this popular house to-morrow evening the Manchester & Jennings combination will occupy the boards. They have a good reputation and are said to furnish a bill sparkling with novelty.

MISS MARY HOGAN.

Next Tuesday evening, at Pope's theatre, a complimentary benefit will be tendered Miss Mary Hogan, and the occasion promises to be one of surpassing interest. The talented beneficiary will be kindly assisted by Mr. and Mrs. John W. Norton in "Don Cæsar de Bazan." A host of literary and musical talent will contribute to the earlier features of the performance. Miss Hogan's friends will rally in strength, as the demand at the box-office indicates.

"STRADELLA."

At Pope's, next Wednesday evening, Flotow's charming work, "Stradella," will be presented for the first time here in English. No pains have been spared to promote the success of this interesting musical event, and the performance will attract a very large and fashionable audience. In every department efficiency is aimed at and the rehearsals bespeak a complete success. The chorus will consist of some of the best voices in the city and the orchestral work will be handled by eighteen carefully selected musicians of local fame. In the cast will be found several well known talented amateurs. Miss Fannie Flesh makes her debut in opera on this occasion as Leonore. The title-role will be sustained by Miss Diard. Messrs. Dillenberg, Hart and Keisker will support leading characters. It may be mentioned that photographs of the distinguished company in the cast will be taken and exhibited at Barr's, J. L. Peters' and Steinberg's. The scenery and costumes will be rich and tasteful. The entire performance is under the direction of the Epstein Brothers, who have done so much to promote the cause of musical talent in this city.

THEODORE THOMAS.

"The Redemption," Chas. Gounod's sacred trilogy will be presented for the first time in its entirety on Saturday, the 19th inst., at the new Armory Hall, with Theodore Thomas' splendid orchestra, a superb cast of soloists and a chorus of 325 voices, selected from the Choral Society and the leading church choirs. The Thomas orchestra will be composed of sixty performers, the best musicians in the country. The soloists are: Mrs. Humphrey Allen, of Boston, soprano; Mrs. Norton Hardegen, of New York, soprano; Mrs. Belle Cole, of New York, contralto; Mr. Frederick Harvey, of New York, tenor; Mr. Franz Remmertz, of New York, basso; Mme. Julia Rive-King, of New York, pianiste. On Friday evening, May 18th, and Sunday matinee, May 20th, symphony concerts have been arranged in the superb artistic style of Theodore Thomas, furnishing a fine opportunity to hear the best instrumental music under the direction of an illustrious leader. The sale of season seats will commence on Monday at Balmer & Weber's. On Thursday single tickets will be sold. A season reserved seat is placed at $3 50, a reserved seat for one concert at $1 50 and admission to one concert is placed at a dollar.

BESSIE MILLER OTON.

Assisted by members of the McCullough Club, Bessie Miller Oton will give a special performance at the Pickwick on Tuesday, May 15. "The Romance of a Poor Young Man" will be presented with the following cast: Bessie Miller Oton, John G. Miller, Wm. Caroline, Fred. Norton, Wm. B. Smythe, Louis C. Haynes, Geo. Hoke, Mrs. Joe Carr, Mrs. W. L. G. B. Allen, Misses Minnie Russell and Lillie Carr.

GUS THOMAS.

Gus Thomas, the popular and talented assistant treasurer at Pope's, will take a benefit next Friday evening. He will be assisted on this occasion by the McCullough Club, of which he is a leading member. Mr. Thomas has contributed much to the artistic success of the McCullough Club performances, and their appearance at his benefit is a well-deserved compliment. The programme will be "Sweethearts" and "His Last Legs." Mr. Thomas appears in the role of O'Callaghan. A crowded house is assured the obliging young assistant treasurer.

JAMES HANNERTY'S BENEFIT.

On Monday, May 14, at the Grand Opera-house, James Hannerty, the genial and popular assistant treasurer, will take a well-merited benefit. Mr. Hannerty will have a bumper house. He is a favorite with amusement patrons, and an obliging, courteous official du theater. The bill for the occasion will be: "Summer Boarders."

NOTES.

The Dime Museum, Fourth and Walnut streets, offers some new and attractive features this week. A band concert is given twice daily.

On Thursday next the Booth Dramatic Club will present "Evadne" at Pope's Theater. On Saturday next, matinee and evening, the McCullough Club will give performances at this house.

Sackett's Dime Museum, 13 South Fifth street, continues to draw liberally of public patronage. Some excellent features are provided this week and novelties are always being secured by the enterprising management. The exhibition is open afternoon and evening.

GENTLEMEN will find my stock of Spring goods worthy their attention. It embraces every novelty of the Eastern and foreign markets.
Respectfully, etc.,

The Boy on the Chain-Gang.

From the Detroit Free Press.

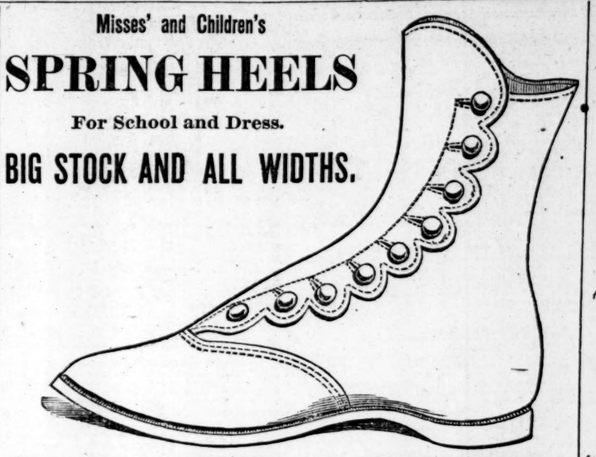

They were working right in front of the hotel at a little hamlet in Alabama—the chain-gang. There were nine villainous-looking men, each wearing shackles and having no shame as they looked into the face of the strangers on the veranda. A chain-gang is an every-day sight in the South, and few people waste sympathy upon the justly-punished wretches, but all of a sudden something happened in the gang never to be forgotten. A boy not yet 14 years old came up with a pail of water, and we saw that he belonged to the chain-gang. Larceny had sent him to associate with those villains for three long years. He looked pale and broken down, and his shame compelled him to avert his face as he came up. It was a sad sight to see a tot of a boy like him brought out and degraded and disgraced, and he felt the situation so keenly that at the first kind word from the platform the tears welled up and blinded his eyes.

There was a woman there from Indiana who walked straight down to the boy and put her hand on his head and shed tears with him. There must have been something in his look to remind her of some one—perhaps a son at home or one under the sod. Her heart was full of sorrow and sympathy and her words broke the lad down. This lasted four or five minutes, to the great astonishment and annoyance of the armed guard in charge. The lightning express coming down the road had just whistled, and the iron rails were quivering under the approaching thunder, when the guard called out:

"Come, you young thief, get back after more water!"

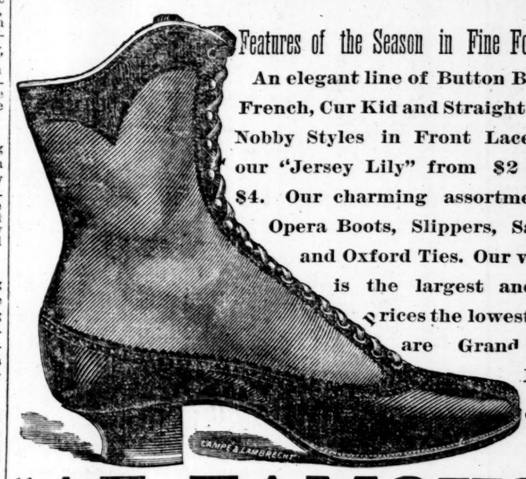

The woman started back at the words, dragging the child with her, but in an instant he broke away, wheeled and clasped her hand and kissed it, and then—what? Not a hand could have been lifted to prevent. The express was thundering up at forty miles an hour, not intending to make a stop here, and the lad turned from the woman whose kind words had opened the well-springs of his heart, and at the same time horrified him at his situation, and with one spring he alighted in front of the locomotive. Next instant his crushed and mangled body was flung into the roadside ditch, and he had served his sentence. We picked him up tenderly, and the woman wept over him as they washed the pale face and folded the boy-hands over the crushed and broken breast, but the lad was beyond the need of earthly friends.

At Cincinnati drew to the "Queen City" all manner of people. Here's a couple—the two extremes—who have just returned. Many a busy man and woman, as well, would have been only too glad to have witnessed such a rare gathering of "Stars"—graceful manners; Mary Anderson, whom the talented Henry Watterson styles "the central figure of the time;" fragile Clara Morris, who makes one's blood run cold by her Intense Realism; the veteran Murdoch, still gracious and an excellent elocutionist; McCullough, the acknowledged "Noblest Roman of them all," and slim, hollow-eyed and scholarly Barrett—a "Stars" company, indeed—well worthy the attendance of the best people in the land. The quality and quantity of the "Players" were certainly excellent, but not a jot more so than the QUALITY and QUANTITY of the GRAND DISPLAY of

HORSE SHOEING, JOHN M. GOMES, 1410 CLARK AVENUE.

The cuts show a good plan for shoeing a roadsters. heavy, broad shoe in front, light, narrow one behind A diamond steel toe on front shoes is an old style and a good one, "See fig. 21." The weight in front gives the horse action. Again, a convex shoe in front very good, especially for an overreaching horse—letting the toe of the foot project over the shoe deadens the sound.
